Rain hampers plan for park opening

By NATALIE GIEHL
The Battalion

Recent flooding from heavy rains has delayed completion of the long-awaited Wolf Pen Creek Park in College Station.

Stephen Beachy, director of Parks and Recreation for the City of College Station, said the site for the park was extremely sensitive to the recent rains because of its location on a flood plain. "The weather has certainly hampered the completion of the project," Beachy said.

After construction is completed, Beachy said any problems caused by future rains should be minimized, and the park will reused for two months while we wait for a grand opening," she said.

Walker said the city has planned many events for this spring, provided weather cooperates. The College Station Jazz Festival is scheduled April 24. Also, the Children's Movie series, local and regional talent showcases, as well as a possible Shakespeare series are planned.

"We do have a big population of interest and we try to do some things that are good for them," Walker said.

The majority of funds for the project came from the City of College Station. The park was first proposed in March of 1987.

The design includes concrete and masonry with all electrical systems located above the maximum flood level.

Beachy hopes the park will be ready for its grand opening date of April 2. If not, the park should open in May.

The city has already scheduled events for this spring in the new amphitheater. Program Supervisor Sheila Walker said the only problem the city has encountered is setting a completion date.

Railroad crews will continue replacing rail at the crossing on FM 2818 near Wellborn Road today through Friday reducing traffic to one lane from 11 a.m. until 5 p.m.

The crews were unable to complete the project by Jan. 15, as originally planned, because of recent rain.

"I was told that the bad weather Thursday delayed their (railroad workers) work," said Pat Williams, area engineer for the Texas Department of Transportation.

The department was notified by Union Pacific Railroad officials that the project required more than the two days originally esti-

An unidentified construction worker continues work on the railroad tracks near FM 2818 and Wellborn road. Recent rains have delayed completion of the project thus restricting traffic.
