he stopped performing abortions.

'It is an unfortunate horror and holocaust that we are living here today," said Robinson, who performed abortions until he became a Christian.

"We kill about 4,000 babies everyday, and there's not a single line in the newspaper," he said. "Something you know is morally wrong can be made into something 'politically correct'." Ann Bradley of BVCPS said the service is a "bright spot on the horizon" which offers "hope to those who think their lives are hopeless."

Bradley said adoption is an alternative to abortion.

"Not all people who get pregnant kill their babies," she said. "They want to give them life."

Adoption as an option was the topic of Melody Thompson's testimony as she told the crowd of her experience with an "open adoption" in which the birth mother and adoptive parent or parents meet. Not everyone at the rally agreed with what the speakers said though they respected their right to say it.

They try to make it seem like being a Christian and being Pro-Choice are incompatible," said Carrie Thrasher, Aggie Democrats historian.
