

Getting a leg up

Nathan Douglas, a senior veterinary medicine major from Georgetown, is testing a horse for lameness outside the large animal clinic Wednesday afternoon. Douglas is being assisted by Glenda Pearce, who is a technician at the animal clinic.

Religion debate

be taken literally. "What we have is six stages of creation," he said. "That does not mean six 24-hour days."

The Agnostic and Atheist Group stressed the importance of knowing the definitions of agnostic and atheist.

Brett Lemoine, a senior computer science major, said an atheist denies the existence of God while an agnostic has yet to decide whether God exists.

"I don't want you to think that atheists are all depressed and looking for things that aren't there," Lemoine said. "I'm happy with my life."

The panelists for Campus Crusade for Christ explained why they are Christians.

"We find Christianity to be the only religion that is internally consistent," Swanson said. "Christianity is not a list of do's and don'ts. Christianity is being close to God."

Kim Moreland, sophomore biology and Russian major, said she grew up in an agnostic family and converted to Christianity.

"I'm able to deal with problems a lot better because I know God is in control," she said. "I feel like I'm whole now."

Many members of the audience said the debate went well, but both groups weren't always clear in their responses.

"The Campus Crusade seemed to contradict their own statements, but the Agnostic and Atheist Group did avoid some questions," said Stacey McComas, sophomore microbiology major.

Some audience members said the groups were successful at being respectful of each other.

"It went very smoothly," said Bud Cox, mechanical engineering graduate student. "There are a lot of people who can't make the time to study religions."

Graduation

"I think it's necessary, but it needs more advance notice," DuChamp said. "In the future, I think they should implement another ceremony."

According to the memo, implementing an additional ceremony was disregarded in an effort to "avoid further strains on tight resources."

Carter said time and cost restraints would make it difficult to implement a fourth graduation ceremony.

"We reviewed all alternatives, and this is the best one we could come up with given the facility and the shortness of time," Carter said.

There will be closed-circuit viewing of the graduation ceremonies in one of the Rudder theaters for the overflow crowd where no admission tickets are required.

"I think under the new circumstances, it's no different in the long run," Koldus said. "There's been an overflow in the past and we may be able to accommodate the overflow better this way."

Carter said degree candidates will be receiving more information about the admission tickets for commencement exercises soon.

Whether admission tickets will be required for the August and December commencement exercises will depend on the number of graduation candidates since they are not traditionally as large as the May ceremonies.

"This was a very difficult decision for the president to make because we know how important this is to the degree candidate and their family and friends," Carter said.
