of interest," Thompson said. "I don't think there's a structural problem with objectivity. If they follow the standard military procedures outlined, it's a really sound procedure for producing objective decisions."

As of Thursday, Col. James L. McCleskey, chief of operations and training and investigating officer in this case, declined to comment about the status of the investigation.

James Nelson, an associate of ethical studies at the Hastings Center in New York, said the appearance of justice is often more important than the verdict.

"The perception that justice is being done is an important part of justice," he said. "The Corps must make it clear they are handling it right."

Nelson said public confidence in the Corps' review policies may be weakened because this investigation has been kept internal.

Dr. Ed Harris, associate professor of philosophy at A&M, said because the Corps has dealt with harassment incidents in the past, investigators may want to end speculation about its internal review procedures.

"They have the motivation to be as objective as possible," he

Bryan appoints city police chief

The city of Bryan announced Thursday that Assistant Police Chief Lee Freeman will become the city's new police chief April 1.

Freeman will lead the department upon Chief Charles Phelps' retirement March 31.

The new chief has been with the Bryan Police Department for 25 years. He helped implement the Street Crime Apprehension Team (SCAT) which targets street level narcotics crimes, and he also co-authored the Bryan Police General Orders Manual, which includes the department's rules, regulations, policies and procedures.

Freeman was selected by an internal search committee composed of the city manager, assistant to the city manager, city attorney, city secretary and the city's six department directors.

the nation's leading educators. He was chosen 1987 Man of the Year in Higher Education.

The lecture is co-sponsored by Texas A&M's College of Education. For more information about the lecture, call 845-8384.

Conference offers science advances

The Sixth Annual Science, Technology and Youth Symposium will be held at Texas A&M Saturday to provide high school science teachers and their students information on advances in science and technology.

Scientists and other professionals will present 98 lectures, workshops and tours that relate their work to the roles of science and technology in the lifestyles of the 21st century.

A special session for teachers will focus on advances on teaching science and technology subjects. For more information, call 845-3910.

Cancer society benefits from run

The sixth annual Bill Thomason 5-K Memorial Run/Walk will be held Saturday to benefit the American Cancer Society.

The event has been dedicated to the memory of Bill Thomason who died of pancreatic and liver cancer in 1988. Thomason emphasized the importance of fitness as a regular part of people's lives.

The run/walk begins and ends at the Aerofit Club & Activity Center. The entry fee is $10 and all participants will be given commemorative T-shirts. Awards will be presented to the top three finishers for men and women in various age categories.

For more information about the event, call 846-8868 or 846-5391.

Department tries to help reputation

The Texas A&M Department of Chemistry will be the host this weekend of a Graduate Visitation Weekend in which 44 prospective graduate teaching assistants from 23 states and Canada will participate.

The purpose of the visit is to offer the prospective graduate students the opportunity to meet faculty and students in the chemistry department.

The weekend will be held to increase the reputation of the department's graduate faculty.

The department also is trying to increase its number of minority students. The percentages of black and Hispanic students in the chemistry department are higher than the state and national averages.

Fourteen percent of the total number of black doctoral chemistry graduates received their degrees from the department.
