discrepancies. "The key here is what is and what isn't a record," Tomlinson said. "Some say disciplinary actions fall under that (student records) and therefore are protected by the amendment."

Criminal records are not protected by the Buckley Amendment, so although the University was investigating what could be a criminal act, the incident is protected by the amendment because no criminal charges were filed, Tomlinson said.

In a Battalion interview on Jan.

28, Corps Commander Matthew Michaels said the two cadets had "fraternized," which is strictly against Corps policy.

The accused cadet, a senior band member, was suspended from his leadership position in the Corps, which Michaels said was not an indication he was guilty of the allegations.
