Klan Rally

Under the cartoon, the release said, "You've heard Ron Wilson talk about how bad Whites are at Texas A&M. Now hear what we have to say."

Wilson told The Battalion Wednesday that the KKK needs to increase their supporters, and this is just another attempt to do it.

"They obviously need something to bolster their sagging image," he said.

Lowe said cultural programs, such as multicultural week, exclude whites and are therefore discriminatory. Students should hear the organization's message before they decide whether to attend, he said.

"We are not a violent organization," Lowe said. "We are simply a white's civil rights group. I think people who attend will be pleased."

"Once the minority becomes the majority, we are going to be victims," Lowe said. "And they will not be as good to us as we have been to them."

Wilson said he in no way agrees with the message of the KKK but added that anyone has the right to protest.

"It's a free country," he said. "We have to allow individuals to express their opinion, no matter how sordid it is.

"But obviously I don't condone their cause," Wilson said he would invite the KKK to Houston to have a rally.

"I'd invite them to come down to the Fifth Ward or the inner city in Houston to have their rally," he said.

College Station Mayor Larry Ringer said the police department will do all they can do to insure the rally is peaceful.

"We can't deny them the opportunity to hold their rally," he said. "The price we pay for democracy is that everyone gets freedom of speech."

Ringer said the best reaction for citizens is to ignore the rally.

"Most people are like I am and don't agree with the philosophies of the KKK," he said. "The best thing we can do is go about our daily business regardless of what they have planned."

Lowe said he has sent letters to almost 200 businesses in the Brazos Valley area and will phone students individually in an effort to increase attendance.

The rally is scheduled for April 24 at Oaks Park from 1 p.m. It is expected to last for three hours.

Lowe said all members of the "white public" are invited to the rally.

town would take care of us," he said. "Each individual took care of us in their homes. Except when we had our meals on the train. We had a diner, and we took our meals on the train, except for some of the meals which we took with the people outside in the town. But I never was in that category."

Connected with the band was an 11-piece orchestra which was paid to furnish music for the two Corps dances each month, according to the "Long Horn," the 1915 A&M student yearbook.

Greene played flute in the orchestra. Several larger dances on campus also employed the orchestra to play for them.

"Stag dances would be given for two bits (25 cents) a person," he said. "We would go and play for these stag dances until 10:30 p.m., from 8 to 10:30, for two bits a head. Most of that went to the band members, you see. Sometimes, I would get $5 or $6 for one night. That was a big thing."

Upon coming to A&M, Greene said he didn't receive the same amount of freshman treatment that some of the other freshman did because of his age.

"I was about 22 or 23," Greene said. I know I was about the age that the seniors were. The seniors seemed to like me. One of the seniors asked me to room with him the end of the first year.

"Sometimes I had a dignity," he said. "I guess my age was what it was. It was an advantage that seemed to impress the seniors."

In academics, Greene excelled at arithmetic although English tended to give him trouble.

"I could do senior and junior arithmetic in my freshman year because I just happened to have that part known, especially multiplication where everything had to be multiplied out," Greene said. "They didn't have machines or anything like that for calculating."

"Out of the last year, I just lacked one grade from making a perfect grade," he said. "I decided a long time before I graduated that the way to graduate and to get good grades was to study the books because your examinations covered what was in the books."

Greene received his degree in agriculture.

"In my last year, they started putting agriculture in high schools. So I applied for agricultural teaching," Greene said. "I never did know a darn thing about agriculture. I didn't know a thing about agriculture nor teaching either. So I took agricultural teaching."

After graduation, Greene taught school at Gatesville. After two years, he decided he had had enough of playing the same record to a different group each year, he said.

He worked at a reform school the following year before being drafted.

"After that, I went into the war (World War I)," he said. "I stayed in that huge massive American war for six months. That was 1918."

After the war, Greene entered the oil business. He married and raised two daughters. He currently resides in San Angelo.

Although none of Greene's children or grandchildren enrolled at Texas A&M, a nephew, great-nephew, great-great-nephew and great-great-niece did attend A&M.

Under his senior picture in the 1915 "Long Horn," it says of Greene:

"Ossie" gets the name of 'Browneyes' from the Glee Club trip, as all the girls asked about the pretty brown-eyed boy in the orchestra. His good looks are far inferior to his talents. He is an excellent leader of men; a clean sportsman, and in his classes, he stands at the top. The only drawback that he has is the short epithet that he wants on his tomb: 'Here Lies A Man.' We are expecting great things of 'Ossie' in the future and know that we shall not be disappointed."

prison rather than death as the appropriate punishment.

The U.S. Supreme Court, however, in January upheld his death sentence, narrowly ruling Graham could not challenge a now-discarded state law that limited his jury's consideration of youth or family problems as mitigating evidence.

Graham said he began his hunger strike on Monday and would continue it indefinitely.

"I will continue on the hunger strike until some type of relief is granted in protest not only to my execution but also to the racism the way the death penalty is carried out here in Texas," he said. "I think it's an issue that needs to be addressed."

Of the 372 inmates on death row in Texas, 48 percent are white, 35 percent black and 16 percent Hispanic.

According to 1991 U.S. Census figures, 66 percent of Texans are white, 23 percent Hispanic and 10 percent black.
