Psychologist says minister incapable of killing wife Secret lover: Railey innocent

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN ANTONIO — A psychologist told a spellbound courtroom Wednesday she carried on a secret love affair with a former Dallas minister but insisted that he was incapable of trying to kill his wife.

With occasional defiance, the flashy blonde witness recounted details of her long-running romance with Walker Railey before and after the near-strangulation of his wife six years ago.

But on cross-examination, when asked if Railey was capable of such violence, Lucy Papillon declared:

"I know he's not."
"And in a bizarre conclusion, prosecutor Howard Wilson failed dramatically to shake her testimony, asking her if "even the best psychologists" make mistakes.

"Sometimes, Howard," she said, "but I believe in this case I know I'm correct."
"You know that you're correct that he is not the type to do something...?"

"He is incapable," she interrupted.
"He is psychologically incapable?" Wilson persisted.

"That's what I believe," she said, her dark eyes blazing. "I know."

Papillon's long-awaited testimony was the emotional highlight of the 10-day-old trial but jurors also heard for the first time Wednesday the taped telephone calls that could help send Railey to prison for up to 20 years.

Peggy Railey survived the April 21, 1987, attack but remains clinically brain dead in a Tyler nursing home.

In the most volatile day of the trial, now in its second week, State District Judge Pat McDowell formally overruled vigorous defense efforts to block testimony about Railey's suicide attempt 10 days after the attack.

The defense argued that such testimony was irrelevant and prejudicial.

"My demon has finally gotten the upper hand," Railey wrote in a suicide note found in his hospital suite the next morning. "I am the baddest of the bad... I am the lowest of the low."

The state maintains Railey's infatuation with Papillon prompted the attack on his wife and that he orchestrated a "clumsy attempt" to cover his actions with a phony alibi.

Railey, 45, insists he was researching a book that night at Southern Methodist University.

The state brought a parade of witnesses Wednesday to show the jury that Railey was in and out of SMU libraries that night but no one saw him there during a critical time gap.

The attack on Mrs. Railey occurred between 9:30 p.m. and midnight.

Papillon told the jury she spoke with Railey by phone several times that night and that sometime after 7:30 p.m. he visited at her home for 45 minutes. "We just talked..." she said.

About 11 p.m., she said, Railey called from a library at SMU and asked if he could come over. "I told him I was really tired and it was late. I said no."

On cross-examination, lead defense attorney Doug Mulder sought to defuse the suicide issue through his questioning of Papillon, a practicing psychologist now living in California.

"Did he ever make a statement to you that if the relationship became public and church members found out about it, he'd kill himself?" Mulder asked.

"He said that... I didn't interpret it that he would actually kill himself," Papillon replied.

She also insisted that Railey respected his wife and that he cared deeply for her and his two young children. "Do you have any reason to believe his wife was aware that you all were engaged in some kind of affair?" Mulder asked.

"No, I do not," she replied.
"Did you ever make demands on him or give him any ultimatums or deadlines as regards your relationship?"

"No, none."
"Did he ever say if you don't divorce your wife or get rid of your wife, I'll not see you anymore?"

"No."
Under direct questioning by Wilson, Papillon, a Methodist bishop's daughter, said she met Railey in the mid-80s on a church-related television show.

She also attended Railey's First United Methodist Church. Papillon, her voice soft but steady, told the jury her relationship with Railey turned sexual in June 1986, some 10 months before the attack on Mrs. Railey.

"From June of 1986 until April 1987, did you have sexual relations on a regular basis?" Wilson asked.

"Fairly regularly."

She said she frequently accompanied Railey on church trips and that they had sexual liaisons in Kansas, California, Georgia, Texas, Arkansas and elsewhere, including Europe.

Nighttime launch set for shuttle Discovery

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — NASA will try to send space shuttle Discovery on an atmospheric research mission next week, pushing Columbia's German-sponsored science flight into late April.

If all goes well, Discovery would lift off at 1:32 a.m. Tuesday on the eight-day flight. A nighttime launch is necessary to catch orbital sunrises and sunsets at the right spots for ozone measurements.

Columbia was supposed to be the next shuttle up, but a stuck valve caused a main engine shutdown three seconds before liftoff on March 22. NASA said Tuesday that Columbia will be launched no earlier than April 24.

The same kind of engine valve failed in testing on Discovery over the weekend, and NASA replaced the bad component Tuesday. Discovery's other engine valve tested fine, said spokesman George Diller.

Diller said engineers haven't yet found a connection between the two failed valves. A piece of non-metallic debris, slightly more than one-tenth of an inch long, was blamed for Columbia's stuck valve.

Both valves were sent for analysis to California main engine maker Rocketdyne, a division of Rockwell International.

NASA is replacing Columbia's three main engines with those intended for Endeavour's satellite-retrieval mission.

The Endeavour mission has been rescheduled for late May. NASA has no plans to change the dates for the four remaining shuttle missions for 1993.

Perot, congress members meet

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former presidential candidate Ross Perot did something unusual Wednesday. He had a meeting with a dozen members of Congress and they all kept it secret until it was over.

Perot, a Dallas businessman, met for more than an hour with Republican members of the House Budget Committee, said Bruce Cuthbertson, spokesman for Rep. John Kasich, R-Ohio.

"There wasn't a single reporter or photographer. Everybody kept it quiet," Cuthbertson said.

He said Perot and the Republican lawmakers discussed President Clinton's budget proposal, alternative budget approaches and the process Washington goes through to put a federal budget together.

Execution date insults cop killer

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Convicted cop killer Leonel Herrera said Wednesday he's offended and angered that his next execution date has been set for May 5, Cinco de Mayo, or Mexican Independence Day.

"It's an insult," Herrera, in his first interview since he arrived on death row 12 years ago, said Wednesday. "May 5 is considered a big day in Mexico and to all Hispanic people. It's an insult to all Hispanic people in the United States and Mexico and wherever they may be."

A judge in Edinburg last week set the execution date for Herrera, 45, of Edinburg, convicted of the Sept. 29, 1981, shooting death of Enrique Carrisalez, a rookie Los Fresnos police officer who had pulled him over for speeding. Herrera pleaded guilty to another killing that took place minutes later when Department of Public Safety Trooper David Rucker stopped Herrera for a traffic violation six miles east of Los Fresnos. Carrisalez lived 16 days after his shooting. Rucker died immediately.

Bill requires kids be immunized

AUSTIN (AP) — The state House tentatively approved a bill Wednesday that would help ensure all Texas children are immunized against disease.

The measure, sponsored by Rep. Nancy McDonald, D-El Paso, would require hospitals and physicians to immunize a child under age 18 who has not been vaccinated for diseases such as measles and polio.

"I think we're going to see a serious reduction in the number of childhood diseases," said Gov. Ann Richards, who has made the bill one of her top priorities. "I think it's going to have a big impact in the low-income community."

"If we're ever going to do anything about health, we've got to get on the preventative side of it and that's what this bill is."

The measure, which will cost slightly more than $50 million over the next two-year budget period, has already passed the Senate. If the House approves the bill on a final vote, it will return to the Senate for consideration of several House amendments.

The bill would exempt children from immunizations if they have a religious conflict.

The bill also would relieve doctors and hospitals from liability if the parents refuse to have their children immunized.

The doctor would not be held liable if the records are not inspected.

American Airlines chairman announces plans for layoffs

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DALLAS — American Airlines will lay off 500 pilots, 400 maintenance workers and an unknown number of flight attendants and other employees as part of its plan to pull out of unprofitable markets, officials of the carrier said Wednesday.

Robert L. Crandall, chairman of the company, told airline employees Wednesday in Chicago that the reductions would take place by the fall, according to The Dallas Morning News' Thursday editions.

The Morning News said the layoffs are likely to exceed 2,000 employees, or about 2 percent of the airline's total of 97,535 employees on Jan. 31.

"There will be layoffs," American spokesman Al Becker told The Associated Press. "But there's no timetable yet."

The airline announced two weeks ago its plans to ground 28 wide-body jets, reducing the airline's seat capacity by 6 percent.

The airline said then that parking those airlines would eliminate 470 pilot jobs, 1,300 flight attendant jobs and many other positions. The company added that it hoped to avoid layoffs through retirements and resignations.

"The furloughs are not a direct result of the DC-10 grounding or any other airplane decision. They're just a result of the overall shrinkage of the airline," American spokesman John Hotard said.

On Monday, Delta Air Lines said it would furlough about 600 pilots beginning in June and would ground 28 airplanes by January.

United Airlines said in January it would lay off 2,800 employees and not hire 1,900 that it had planned to add. Like American and Delta, United is also retiring older airplanes ahead of schedule.

Medical

Arnot outlined four ways to improve the health of the children in America.

Arnot encouraged parents to make athletes out of their children. "During the first six years, children develop basic skills," he said. "This gives them abilities later in life that improve their self confidence and help them succeed in life."

Arnot's second piece of advice was to teach children to "eat to win." "Children need to see the magical quality to food," he said.

By seeing foods as medicinal, Arnot believes people will eat better and therefore, perform better.

Providing children with a sense of optimism was Arnot's third point. He said optimists are much healthier and heal faster than pessimists.

Finally, Arnot talked about giving children a sense of vision. "Children need the vibrant images that they get from books and the roes," he said.

Imagery helps in healing, he said. This is why many Americans have turned to alternative medicine specialists for medical aid.

"We don't give our children the vision that they need," Arnot said. "They need a vision that is free from the economic ties of the traditional American dream."

"So few of us take the time to dream of what we can become and more importantly of what our children can become," he said.
