Young women visit work force

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

They took to the courts and the clinics, walked the halls of business and government, and watched their moms and dads on the job Wednesday. Hundreds of thousands of young girls across America were in the workplace, learning one important career lesson: There's a world of choices awaiting them.

They were participants in the "Take Our Daughters to Work" campaign sponsored by the Ms. Foundation. The day was designed to boost the self-worth and self-confidence of girls ages 9 to 15, and introduce them to jobs they might not normally consider.

"What we wanted to do is get girls on the radar screen," said Marie Wilson, foundation president, who projected about a million people participated in the event.

"The world is changing, we need to be prepared and we need to prepare our daughters," said Joyce Cosby, a safety engineer who took her 15-year-old daughter to the DuPont Co. chemical plant in Charleston, W. Va. "After college (it) isn't the white picket fence and Barbie dolls."

"You don't see enough of this," said her daughter, Adrianna Joyce. "Women should never be satisfied. I think we've come a long way since women couldn't vote, but there's so much further we can go."

The nation's first daughter, 13-year-old Chelsea Clinton, didn't participate. "She said, 'You know, it's easier for me,'" President Clinton said. "You work where you live. I know what it's like."

Many girls took advantage of the open doors at businesses ranging from small insurance companies to the Fortune 500 - IBM, Sears and DuPont. Other participants included the Army, the Department of Health and Human Services, TV networks including ABC and CNN, hospitals, supermarkets, banks, colleges and the harbor master of the Port of New Orleans.

"Adults are really talking honestly and seriously to girls about work," Wilson said. "It puts attention on these girls for competence, for skills, for who they're going to be in the work force."
