Chicago tops New York 97-94

Knick's home winning streak ends

NEW YORK - Good-bye homecourt advantage. So long 27-game home winning streak. And maybe farewell to the New York Knicks' chance to dethrone the two-time NBA champion Chicago Bulls.

Chicago won its third straight game in the Eastern Conference finals Wednesday night, breaking a cycle of home victories with a 97-94 triumph that saw Michael Jordan score 17 of the Bulls' last 22 points and finish with 29.

The biggest points of all, however, came from guard B.J. Armstrong, whose 3-pointer gave Chicago a 95-93 lead with 1:17 left.

A free throw by Charles Smith made it 95-94 with 52 seconds left, and Patrick Ewing blocked Stacey King's shot, forcing a 24-second violation.

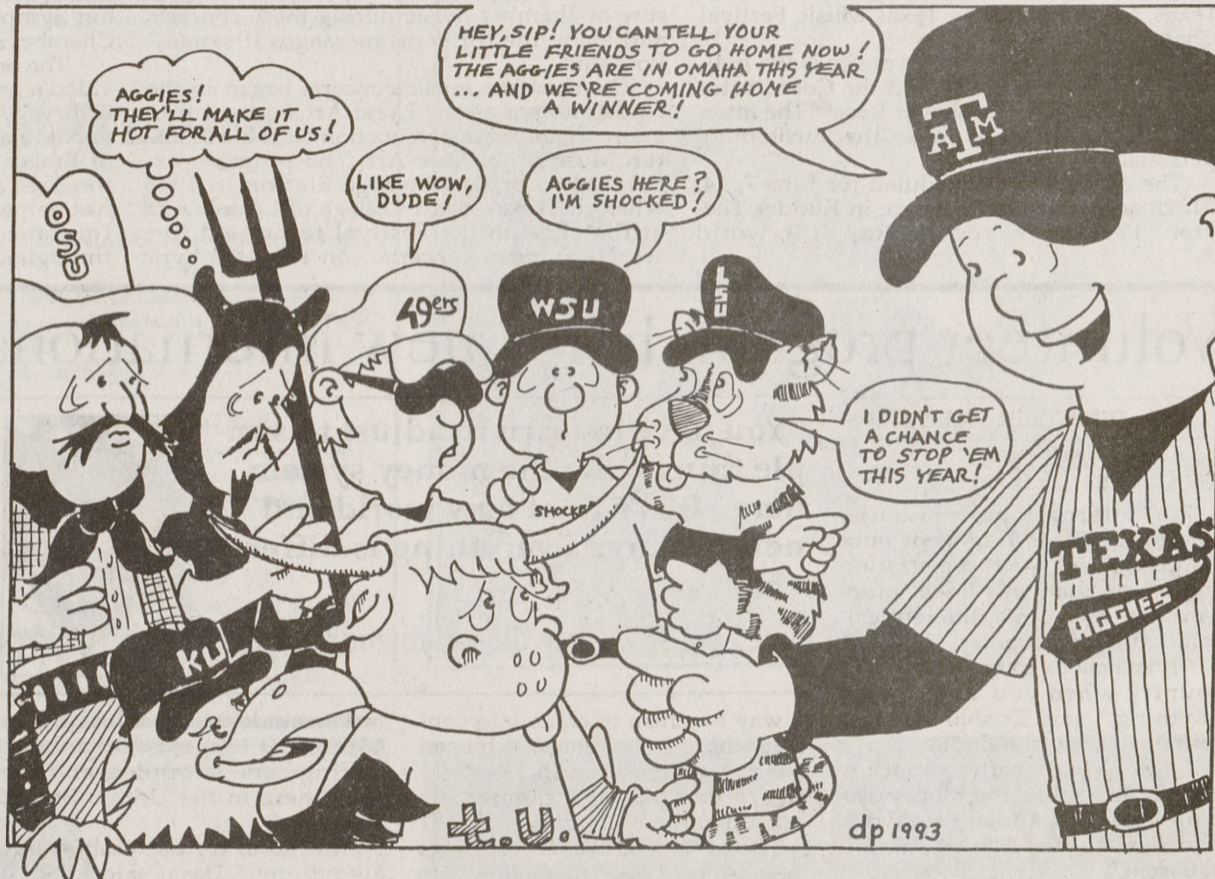

That gave the Knicks a final possession, and Smith appeared for a fleeting moment to have an open path to the basket, but he was thwarted on three attempts to score.

Jordan finally got a loose ball and passed to Armstrong for a last-second basket at the buzzer.

Pippen scored 10 of his 28 points in a six-minute span of the third period, leading a 16-10 spurt that put the Bulls in front 73-68.

Chicago now leads the series 3-2 with the next game on Sunday, June 6 in Chicago.
