Ware, a great A&M athlete during the early 1900s. DeWare was originally able to hold 3,000 to 3,500 spectators and had no handball courts, so the basketball area stretched from wall to wall, floor to ceiling. Carl Landiss, professor of health and physical education at A&M from 1943 to 1979, said when he came to campus, there was not enough seating for basketball games. "The students and faculty both went to games according to first letter of their last names," says Landiss. "One night A-Ls were allowed to attend and another night was M-Zs." The problem of seating, a growing student population and a larger athletic program led to the building of G. Rollie White Coliseum. The idea was to build the new complex and tear down the old field house; however, funding was never sufficient to finish the new building, so the school decided to renovate DeWare. The coliseum stayed its familiar horseshoe shape and DeWare received new life. Today, DeWare's only resemblance to its past is the basketball floor. Handball courts were added during the renovation. This cut the ceiling clearance in half and the enormous arching windows are, for the most part, hidden from view. Instead of huge iron rafters and open area above the court, there is only acoustic tiles and cracked paint on the few visible windows. The renovation also cut seating in half. Both DeWare and Downs are showing the signs of age. Walls are cracking, roofs leak and floors are beginning to sag. Last summer, the Physical Plant completed a reinforcement project on the field house. In addition, soil conditions considered to have an effect on many old buildings in this area of the country. Expansive clays in the ground have caused many buildings with reinforced slabs and pools to settle unevenly. Because of an above ground crawl space surrounding the Downs pool below its deck, the old pool may have escaped decline evident in the natural swimming facility. A possible solution to the expansive clay problem is to build a pier foundation, such as the one being put under the new sports facility.

To many people on campus such as Martha Nix and swimming coach Melvin Nash, the construction of Downs is a tragedy and the passing of a unique piece of history. Although he admits that the lack of a collegiate level swimming facility has hurt recruiting in the past, Nash said, "I can't promise that I won't shed a tear when this place comes down." DeWare and Downs have apparently outlasted their usefulness. The new complex will have multiple basketball and racquetball courts. The weight room will be larger and air-conditioned. Nash said the new swimming pools will be among the top of collegiate facilities in the nation. Although the new gym will be more aesthetically pleasing, some love the atmosphere of the old Ware weight room. Many people say that they love the sweat-soaked feel of the old gym. Many schools have more than one swimming and gym facility. This gives the students and faculty a choice of places to work out and at the same time keeps new facilities from receiving the treatment of the entire school. Many buildings have come down to make room for the new. When the school built the Randall Tower, the old auditorium, G. Rollie White Hall, was torn down with much dismay among students and faculty. Landiss said people hope that there will be some way of saving the building and that people watched as it went down. Tentatively, the school has decided to put a park-like area where the natatorium and gymnasium now stand. In 1996, yet another piece of history at a school steeped in tradition will be gone to make way for the new.

racial violence was displayed on the campus and surrounding area of the university. It is truly sad to see the cherished event of celebration become synonymous with violence and destruction. It is also sad to see that little can be done as such activities have been occurring on a regular basis since the Montreal Canadiens victory in 1986. Whatever the motive for this outlandish behavior, whether it be racially motivated, class motivated, or just plain celebration enhanced by alcohol, it needs to end. Undoubtedly this is not a per-her bid for a 10th Wimbledon title by beating Michelle Jaggard Lai 6-2, 6-1.

No. 1 Pete Sampras had no more shoulder pain as he beat Neil Borwick 6-7 (12-10), 6-3, 7-6 (7-3), 6-3; No. 4 Becker beat Goellner 4-6, 6-3, 6-2, 6-4; No. 5 Goran Ivanisevic, last year's runner-up, survived a long duel with American Jonathan Stark 6-4, 5-7, 5-7, 7-6 (7-5), 6-4 - neither seemed secondary to the renewed fear of violence.

"This is offensive behavior, and people better wise up," Navratilova said. "We're playing sports, but look what's happened with soccer. They have armed guards on horseback, and dogs, and fences so people can't get into the stadium. This is what the world is coming to. So we shouldn't be that surprised." "This is a sport. This is not a matter of life and death. But I just read in the papers the riots in Chicago were 'nice'.... Gee, what a relief, only two (actually three) people got killed (after the Bulls' NBA victory). You know, $10 billion worth of damage in Montreal after the Canadiens won the Stanley Cup. It's an excuse to be nasty."

Navratilova was glad that the man who harassed Graf will be barred from returning. "Who needs that? That's ridiculous," she said.
"I've had things yelled at me before. It's not nice, but you don't not sink to their level. They're not worth your emotions. But I think it will shake you up, because people like that, if they are willing to say that, you never 'My school felt good today,' Sampras said. I felt good today," Sampras said. Rather,
