ence will take the pressure to hit homers off of Ron Gant and Dave Justice.

Not only was the fire something that the Braves needed to be lit underneath them, but McGriff's first hit as an Atlanta Brave was a towering two-run homerun that tied the game in the middle innings. Subsequently, Atlanta had averaged 4.03 runs per game in their first 93 games and in McGriff's first game as a Brave, and in McGriff's first two games as a Brave, Atlanta has exploded for 21 runs against a very good St. Louis Cardinal team.

Coincidence, I think not. Maybe Greg Maddux will now receive more than his usually anorexic 1.9 runs per game support that the Braves have given him in his 19 starts this year. Even with that, Maddux has pitched like the Cy Young award winner he was last year with the Chicago Cubs, compiling a 9-8 record with an impressive earned run average of 2.82.

With McGriff, the hitting lineup should post 6 or 7 runs a night in support their pitching staff that can't be blamed for Atlanta's poor start, having pitched a Major League low ERA of 3.13.

With nearly 70 games remaining in the 1993 campaign, the Braves will have to play superb baseball to catch the Giants, but they have all the tools and are getting help from the injury bug that has begun to effect San Francisco ever so slightly.

The phoenix, that has taken the form of the Atlanta Braves, will not fall from the race amid the dog days of summer. McGriff will blast his thirty homers at "The Launching Pad," (Fulton-County Stadium) and the pitching staff will only get better. The Braves are a serious contender and the Giants had better prepare themselves for a resurrection of the team that was labeled as a dynasty at the beginning of the season.
