B-CS holds lowest jobless rate, TEC reports

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AUSTIN — Texas' unemployment rate dropped from 7.5 percent in June to 7.2 percent in July, the Texas Employment Commission reports.

TEC Chairman Eddie Cavazos said Tuesday that continuing expansion of high-tech industries in the state could further bring down the rate.

"Businesses, especially high-tech, are locating and expanding in Texas," he said.

"We gradually will see more jobs created in this area, and also we'll see job growth spurred by schools reopening classes."

In July, the number of working Texans rose to 8,339,400.

Employment in the transportation and theme park industries grew with an increase in summer travelers, according to the TEC.

Meanwhile, jobs in manufacturing declined and school staffs were reduced for summer.

Unemployment rates increased in Fort Worth-Arlington, McAllen-Edinburg-Mission and Sherman-Denison.

Bryan-College Station had the lowest jobless rate in both June and July.
