State officials seek to recover desk first used by Sul Ross

The Associated Press

AUSTIN — The most sought-after item on a list of original State Capitol furniture that officials would like to recover is a desk that was a silent participant in some of Texas' most colorful history.

At least 10 governors used the massive, ornate mahogany desk from 1889 until the 1920s, when it officially was lost.

Six decades later, state officials are now trying to track it down — as part of the ongoing restoration of the Capitol.

The desk served Texas' first woman governor. Another governor probably pondered his impeachment there.

Texas women likely were granted the right to vote there. Controversial pardons for thousands of convicts and the births of Texas Tech University and the Texas Railroad Commission probably occurred there.

"That's probably one of the most important desks ... and we don't know what happened to it," Bonnie Campbell, the Capitol curator, told the Austin American-Statesman. "If we could find this desk, I would be a very happy curator."

It's officially called a curtain desk — a roll-top to most. The desk had four drawers with brass handles on each side.

With a decorative rail on top, the desk had frilly carvings on the drawer fronts and two clusters of pigeon holes. Measuring 50 inches high by 64 inches wide by 41 inches deep, it was so finely detailed that Marshall Field, the wealthy Chicago department store magnate, owned one like it.

The desk, like most of the 2,500 other pieces of furniture bought for the 1888 statehouse, was made by A.H. Andrews & Co. of Chicago, a big office supplier of the day.

Lawrence "Sul" Ross, the legendary Indian fighter and Confederate soldier who was governor when the Capitol furniture arrived in early 1889, first used the desk.

Officials said a total of $150,000 was spent on furniture, $50,000 of it for wooden items.

Texas NAACP president urges investigation of random killing

The Associated Press

BEAUMONT — The Texas NAACP president said Sunday he wants the FBI to investigate the death of a black man gunned down in an apparent random attack after he left a nearby town because of racist threats.

William Simpson, 37, was fatally shot the night of Sept. 1 in Beaumont just hours after he moved from Vidor, which now has no black residents. A teen-ager was arrested the next day, but he has not yet been charged in Simpson's death.

Beaumont police have said it appears that Simpson was killed by suspected gang members who demanded money from him.

But Gary Bledsoe, president of the state chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said he will ask the FBI to make sure that Simpson's slaying was not racially motivated.

"The jury is still out. There are still a lot of questions regarding the shooting," Bledsoe said. "There's no question there needs to be a federal investigation."

Bledsoe, in Beaumont on Sunday to appear on Montel Williams' syndicated television talk show, said he also plans to seek the help of U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno.

The 7-foot, 300-pound Simpson was the last black man to leave a housing project in Vidor, a town of about 11,000 that has long been associated with the Ku Klux Klan.

Simpson had said he was forced to leave because of the racial taunts, obscene gestures and threats of lynching.

"There are good people here, don't get me wrong," he said. "But it's overshadowed by the negativity, the hostility, the bigotry of this town." Several other black people had moved into the Vidor housing project earlier this year, but they left before Simpson.
