his flight from Israel early Wednesday, blocking access by reporters. And he wore a bulletproof vest.

Israel's Supreme Court overturned his conviction and death sentence on war crimes charges that alleged he was a brutal Nazi concentration camp guard known as Ivan the Terrible. Demjanjuk maintained he was a victim of mistaken identity. The court said there was enough doubt to overturn the conviction.

The 73-year-old Ukrainianborn Demjanjuk is no longer a citizen of any nation. He was allowed into the United States pending a federal appellate court review of his case.

"For John Demjanjuk it will never really be over,'' said Ed Nishnic, Demjanjuk's 36-year-old son-in-law and the family spokesman.

A decision in the review by the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals could take a month.

Attorney General Janet Reno has vowed to pursue Demjanjuk's deportation on grounds that he had concealed helping the Nazis The Justice Department plans no action until Demjanjuk completes his appeals through the 6th Cir-cuit spokesman Carl Storn sid cuit, spokesman Čarl Stern said Wednesday.

The process could take months or even years. "My blood is coagulating," said Spicer, a Los Angeles resident who was a toddler when she was deported to Auschwitz in Nazi-occupied Poland in 1944.

"It's been so many years but the wound is still open. There isn't a day in my life that I don't remember," Spicer said. "Murderer!" 70-year-old Moses Korotki screamed when Demjanjuk stepped aboard. "He's a killer. Now he's a celebrity," Korotki said, tears welling in his eyes as he recalled his ordeal in the Mathausen concentration camp.

Demjanjuk sat at the front of the business class section. Rep. John Traficant, D-Ohio, sat next to him, with John Jr. behind and bodyguards in nearby seats.
