Snake causes crisis in car

The Associated Press

STEPHENVILLE — After her "squeals on wheels" experience, Dana Allgood isn't eager to drive again.

And she surely won't until someone captures the snake that slithered out of her 1988 Thunderbird's dashboard and into her lap while she was driving.

"I am only 27, but I almost had a heart attack," she said Wednesday, one week after the startling meeting.

"I felt something on my leg and thought it was a fly. I reached down to swat it. I saw something that looked like a rope. When I realized it was a snake, I realized I would have to get that car stopped," the nutrition teacher at Stephenville High School said.

That wasn't easy, because her 4-year-old daughter, Alexa, was with her and when they saw the snake, both went ballistic.

"It's not easy to stop a vehicle when you've climbed into the seat and neither leg is any longer anywhere near the brake pedal," she said.

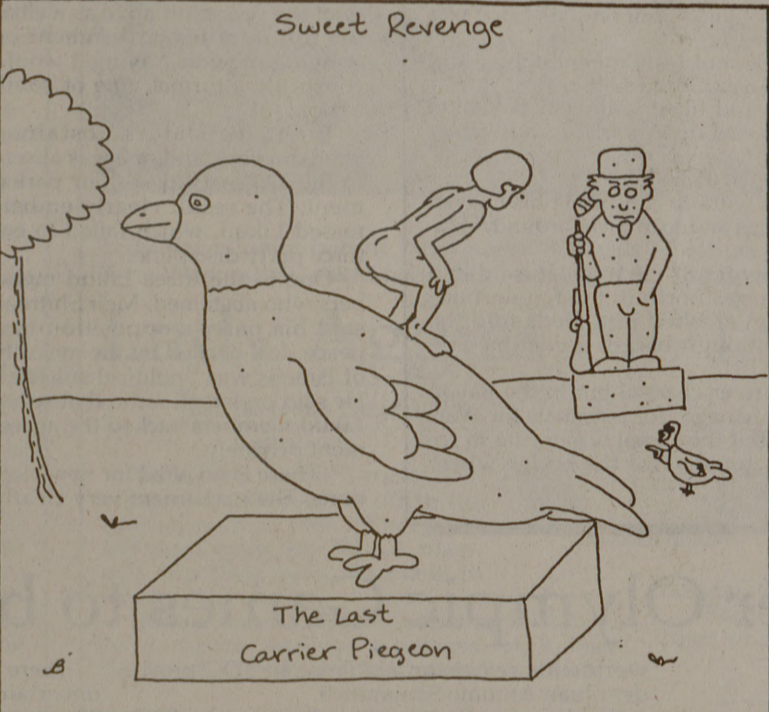

"My daughter was screaming, I was screaming, and I finally got the car stopped by putting it into a lower gear and letting it coast to a stop," she said.

Allgood said she never got a close look at the snake, but her daughter said it was white, yellow, green and brown.

Once her car stopped, two men came by and offered assistance. One drove her and her daughter home, and the other drove her car.

Pavarotti's voice cracks; crowd boos

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Luciano Pavarotti admits he deserved the boos that rained down from the balcony when he failed to hit a high note and his voice cracked during a performance in Italy.

"They give all their love to the opera," Pavarotti said in an interview being broadcast Sunday night on CBS-TV's "60 Minutes."

"I think (they) have the rights to applaud or boo and if you want to know my opinion, they are right."
