First Lady grilled on health care

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Hillary Rodham Clinton met a barrage of questions from doubting lawmakers Tuesday as she opened Congress' hearings on the administration's health care plan.

Standing her ground, she told them, "Americans can no longer wait for health care reform."

Clinton led off as the key witness before the House Ways and Means Committee.

The task is urgent, she said — "As we sit here today, literally hundreds and hundreds of Americans will lose their health care."

Rep. Jim McDermott, D-Wash., wanted to know how the government could force a self-employed person to pay premiums.

What guarantees are there a contractor making $22,000 a year trying to support a family could pay his $4,000 family premium?

McDermott asked.

Clinton tried to assure McDermott that the contractor would get a small-business subsidy and tax break.

Small businesses will in the end be better off because they'll get the same breaks as large companies, Clinton said.

Rep. Jim Bunning, R-Ky., complained about singling out tobacco for a tax increase.

He suggested products high in sugar, caffeine and cholesterol be hit, too, on grounds that they can cause health problems.

Clinton noted that tobacco is considered unhealthy, even in moderation.

"There is no free lunch," she said, and told Bunning, in a remark that brought some chuckles, "If there is a way to ever come up with a tax on the substances you just mentioned, we'll be glad to look at it."

In the Energy and Commerce

Committee, members got five minutes, and went into more detail.

Rep. Thomas Bliley, R-Va., whipped out charts and asked how the administration's plan could keep medical costs to 1 percent more than inflation, when costs have been rising 4 percent above that in Canada and Great Britain.

"Mr. Bliley, that's an excellent question, and I'm glad you asked that," she said.

Rep. Bill Archer, R-Texas, the Ways and Means' ranking Republican, said he was concerned that the White House plan would fatten government bureaucracy and doubted the wisdom of trying out such a huge change without a pilot run.

"Health reform isn't a product to be packaged and sold like a toaster on the Home Shopping Network," Archer said.

treasurer of operations, David Criss, who served Hutchison's planning director also were indicted.

Barron's attorney Chris Gunn said Monday he hasn't ruled out seeking a lesser sentence for client in exchange for his testimony against Hutchison.

Barron, who was indicted for official misconduct and tampering charges, faces up to 30 years in prison and $30,000 in fines, convicted.

"I will weigh every available option about how to defend this case," Gunter told The Associated Press.

Criss, who has an unlisted phone number in Dallas, has declined to comment on the indictment, which charges him with one count of official misconduct.

His attorney, Charles Burton, also has refused to discuss the case.

Suicide

Colon, 25, a Gulf War veteran, accused two staff sergeants in her Fort Hood unit of kissing her on the cheek, running their fingers through her hair and boasting of sexual exploits early last year.

When she filed a formal complaint and asked for a transfer, the Army referred her to a counselor for therapy. She also was charged with "conduct unbecoming a soldier in the form of sexual harassment," according to Army records.

Several hours later, on April 29, 1992, Colon wrote a suicide note and shot herself in the heart.

Historically, the military has been exempt from civilian court damage claims relating to deaths or injuries linked to service-related duties. On those grounds, the Army turned down the family's initial damage claim.

"Claims based on acts incident to service are excluded from consideration," wrote Lt. Col. William Kirk, chief of the Army's Tort Claims Division at Fort Meade, Md.

The family's lawsuit states that month before Colon's death, commanding officers at Fort Hood sued a written policy against sexual harassment. The legal brief alleges that sexual harassment violates military policy and therefore cannot be compared with injuries incurred in the line of duty.

"The problem of sexual harassment in the military needs to be addressed,"
— Doris Besikof, Denver attorney

"The problem of sexual harassment in the military needs to be addressed," Besikof said. "It is not acceptable for sexual harassment to be condoned or glossed over or, in this case, shielded."

The Fort Hood Army post, located outside Killeen, lawyers originally planned to file the lawsuit in San Antonio, but chose San Francisco instead for the convenience of Colon's family, Besikof said.

Plaintiffs in the lawsuit are Colon's parents, Peaches and Alexander Martinez, and her spouse, Army Sgt. Luis Colon, who was transferred from Fort Hood to Puerto Rico four months after his wife's suicide.
