

Military to change system of command

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The idea sounds simple, but for the U.S. military, it is nothing short of revolutionary: Starting next month, the more than 1 million troops in the United States will report to a single commander.

The point is for the normally competitive services to learn to fight as a team. "It really is a historic change," said Gen. Colin Powell, the outgoing chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The change will be celebrated Friday at a ceremony in Norfolk, Va., and Defense Secretary Les Aspin is scheduled to attend.

The new command — dubbed USACOM for U.S. Atlantic Command — puts most of the men and women from the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps in the continental United States under the operational control of a four-star officer based in Norfolk, Va.

An exception will be some forces based on the West Coast who will report to the commander in charge of the Pacific based in Hawaii.

The new job will go to Adm. Paul Miller, the commander-in-chief of the Atlantic Command. In the future, the job could switch to an Army, Marine Corps or Air Force commander.

Miller, who is also NATO's Atlantic commander, had the job of protecting the region's vital sea lanes in the event of an all-out war against the former Soviet Union.

The demise of the Cold War and the return of hundreds of thousands of troops to U.S. shores required a change in the military's organizational chart, and the way it trains its men and women.

Instead of the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps training their own forces in separate military exercises, the USACOM commander will be responsible for organizing joint, or cooperative, training. The new commander will also be in charge of preparing military forces for the growing number of humanitarian or disaster relief missions around the globe.

Miller, in a recent interview, said the move will "capitalize on the investments that each service has made, and employ them as joint forces as opposed to individual service forces."

"That's the biggest leap that we have to get over . . . we have to break some molds," the admiral said.

Powell said the concept was tried twice before, but failed because the service branches refused to yield the authority for their troops.

TO A TRUE GATOR

Lina G.B.V.: I know I used to be garbage. I treated you and many others as objects. I showed no feelings, no emotions and no remorse. Things have happened to me and I have seen things like I should have seen them a long time ago. I have changed for you, not because you asked, but because I know you were what I wanted, and what I was didn't deserve you. I Love You, I will always love you and be true to you. Please forgive all the garbage I have put you through before. I would give my life to be able to make those things up to you. I love you more than I have ever loved before, or will ever again. I ask your forgiveness for all my past. It is true, it is real, but it is also shameful. I am not proud of what I was, but I am proud of what I can be for you. I want to marry you. I want to create a family with you and enjoy it forever. I know for sure this is what I want. There is no chance of me changing my mind, or deciding against this. Please marry me, I will love you for ever.

Yours for ever,
Victor Inchausti
