

Correction

In last Friday's issue of The Battalion, the name of a student running for freshman senator was inadvertently left out from the results of last Thursday's freshman elections.
Jennifer Horelica was elected as a senator for the Class of '97. The Battalion regrets the error.

Senate

In other Faculty Senate business, Richard Feldman, professor of industrial engineering, discussed a need to investigate the University's requirement of using an American Express card to obtain reimbursement for travel expenses during University-related trips.

Feldman said he chose not to carry an American Express card because of its support of organizations he disagrees with and being forced to use one by the University is an infringement on his rights.

A Senate committee will investigate the University's policy concerning the card.

The Senate also vowed to look into offering a degree in visual arts studies.

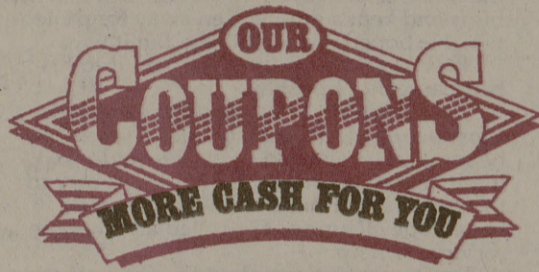

Joseph Hutchinson, professor of environmental design, said he fears students aren't being educated enough in the area of visual arts and music.

Texas A&M is "painfully shy" of offering acceptable courses in the arts to keep this University in competition with other major universities, he said.

"If the University is going to be considered supplemental, it must include fine arts," he said.

The concept of a visual arts degree or more courses in the arts will be brought before the Academic Affairs Committee.
