"We've heard numerous complaints of vendors yelling and almost grabbing people," Busch said. "The Battalion ran a piece calling the situation 'Harassic Park.' I've even heard of students completely avoiding the MSC because of the vendors."

Keith Sunstrom, Concessions Committee member and MSC executive vice president of programming, said he had talked to students about the proposal, and most of them supported it because they thought vendors were an annoyance.

"They're obnoxious," he said. "Students are tired of being yelled at and having newspapers thrown at them. It's like running the gauntlet. You just put your head down, and walk as fast as you can."

Kibler said moving the vendors to a centralized location would also alleviate traffic problems in the MSC.

"We want to take it off the beaten path," Kibler said. "Setting up a fair in a specific area of the University Center Complex will give the students a greater freedom of choice. If you want to go you can; if you don't, you don't have to."

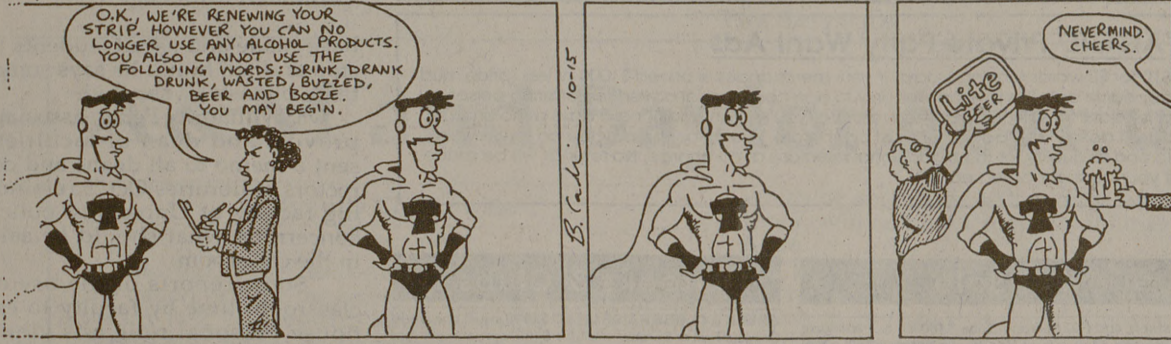

Kibler said another advantage of the fair is that A&M will assist the vendors in advertising the fair. Under the current system, vendors are responsible for their own publicity.

He said the committee is considering inviting institutions who haven't been set up in the MSC in previous years.

"We're looking at extending the number of service companies invited to the fair to include banks and other financial institutions," Kibler

Texas A&M Director of International Coordination Rhonda Snider said the tour gives the dignitaries a feel for what A&M is all about.

"I hope that they will take away with them a sense of the quality of education that Texas A&M provides to its students," she said.

Likewise, Rose said, the Russians' visit will provide a unique opportunity for the Bryan and College Station community to learn about what is going on in Russia.

"The ultimate goal of Sister Cities is to promote peace and understanding of peoples of the world," she said.

Ross Volunteers

The Army has the most representatives in the Ross Volunteers this year, followed by the Air Force, the Navy/Marines and the Aggie Band.

"We look for guys with social grace," Bertamini said. "We look for guys who have demonstrated leadership in the Corps and outside of the Corps."

No female cadets were inducted into the Ross Volunteers this year. Lechowick said only two junior female cadets qualified for the Ross Volunteers, and neither of them applied.

The Ross Volunteers play a major role in two Aggie traditions - Silver Taps and Muster. "We carry on the most important traditions at this University," Bertamini said. "Whether students realize it or not, a Ross Volunteer firing squad will fire for them one day."

Lechowick said this is part of the Ross Volunteers that he likes to play down.

"It's an honor to represent those who have died," Lechowick said. "It's not an honor for us."

Lechowick said the Ross Volunteers separate into three platoons based on height when they perform.

"The tall platoon is called the tree platoon, the middle-height platoon is called the meatballs platoon, and the short platoon is called the squat platoon," Lechowick said.

Lechowick said each platoon has its own series of drills they perform.

The Ross Volunteers perform in the King Rex Mardi Gras Parade in New Orleans, the Bryan-College Station Christmas Parade and the Conroe Go Texan Parade.

"We carry on the most important traditions at this University. Whether students realize it or not, a Ross Volunteer firing squad will fire for them one day."
