JUST THE BEGINNING

Chitwood said the trip is a big step towards establishing A&M as a global university.

"We want to make this trip a focal point in establishing a cultural and educational agreement between Texas A&M and the Mexican universities," Chitwood said. "In a world of an expanding economic, global village, it is important A&M have strong ties with its North American neighbors."

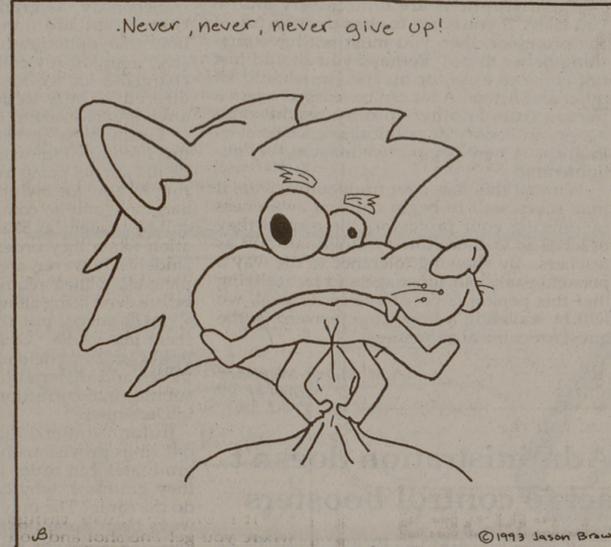

Johanna Roman, assistant director of Mexican and Latin American programs, said the purpose of the trip is for the students to gain insight into the operation of Mexican universities' student organizations, make valuable contacts and learn some socio-cultural and academic aspects of Mexico.

"I think one of the benefits the student will gain from the trip is a better understanding of the Mexican culture," Roman said. "They'll have the opportunity to tour Mexico City and visit city markets, a bazaar, museums, Aztec ruins and other cultural aspects of Mexico."

DeShandra Sandles, director of hospitality of the Southwestern Black Student Leadership Conference, said she is looking forward to seeing how the Mexican student organizations operate.

"I think it will be interesting to compare leadership styles," Sandles said. "I'd like to know how they motivate their students to become involved in student organizations. It's one thing to go to an organization's meeting and another to become a leader of that organization."

On Thursday, the group will meet with student leaders from La Salle University and Universidad Iberoamericana. Also, they will serve as hosts at a reception for the Mexican student leaders at the Texas A&M University Center in Mexico City.

At the reception, the students will make presentations about the student organizations they represent and exchange ideas with the Mexican students. The group will show a video about the history and traditions at A&M.

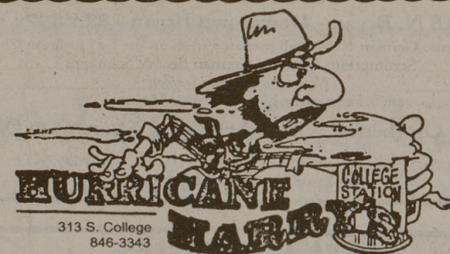

The newly opened center serves as headquarters for A&M's cooperative efforts with Mexican institutions and government agencies and for linking former students and business executives from Mexico and Texas. It provides office and classroom space to A&M administrators developing study abroad programs, as well as for faculty members conducting research and training programs.

The group will participate in a seminar at the center with executives from Mexican corporations. Speaking at the seminar are: John Atterbury, president of Southwestern Bell; George Johnston, president of Chevron Mexico and Lauro Gonzalez, president of the Aggie Club in Mexico.

The students will also visit the Universidad Nacional Autonoma de Mexico, the largest university in Mexico with an enrollment of more than 100,000 students.

The organizations the students represent are sponsoring the trip and host families will provide lodging for the students.
