REJECTION... Town turns down bid for Wal-Mart

The Associated Press

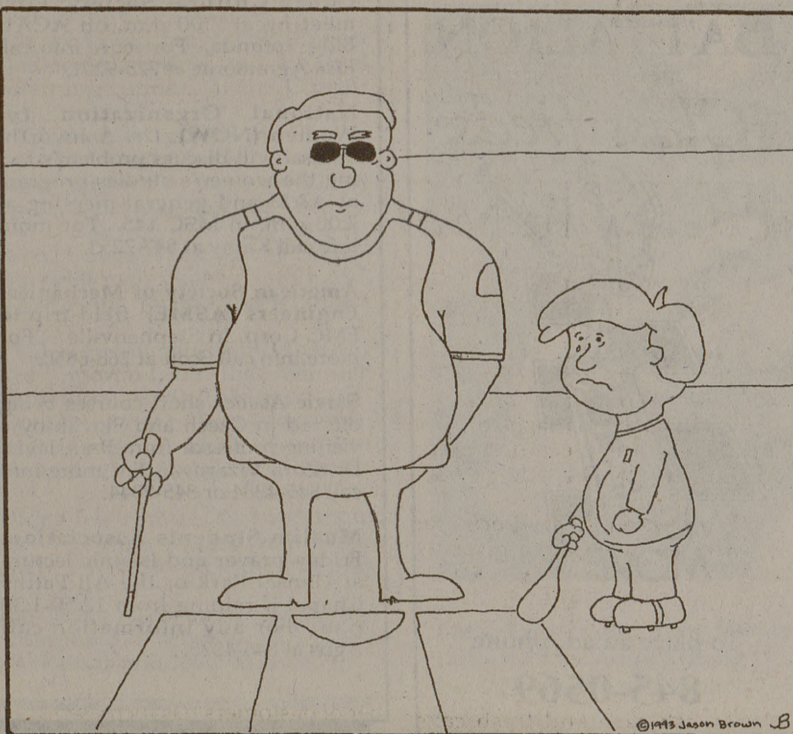

GREENFIELD, Mass. — The downtown Wilson's department store bustled Wednesday with the usual old-timers and homemakers hunting for bargains in a town now jokingly dubbed a "Wal-Mart-free zone."

In a public referendum the day before, this western Massachusetts community of 18,000 narrowly rejected a proposed Wal-Mart as threatening to their small-town way of life.

"It's a very unique town, and I don't think we need big businesses like that to come in and take away from the beauty of the town," said Tami Silk.

It was the latest setback to the nation's largest retailer in its push to transplant its style of Gargantuan storefronts and Lilliputian pricing to New England. Company spokesman Jane Arend said she was unaware of any other community in the country that has voted down a Wal-Mart.

Susan Dey gets life on track

NEW YORK (AP) — Action is the best medicine for Susan Dey.

"I've realized that if you feel victimized, you have to define what is making you unhappy and change it," she says in Sunday's Parade magazine. "It's your own responsibility."

The 41-year-old actress said she overcame anorexia on her own during her years on "The Partridge Family," and beat an alcohol problem while starring in "L.A. Law."

"After years of wanting to be in control, I finally became secure enough to give up that need," she said. "I guess I've come full circle."

She also took the bold career steps of walking away from two hit TV shows.

Dey left "L.A. Law" after several years, seeking a change. She quit "Love and War" after one season because of creative differences with producers.

Women line up to see Fabio

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Women lined up by the hundreds for a face-to-face with Fabio, the romance novel cover-boy-turned author.

"He's the sexiest man in the world, no doubt about it," said Becky Bruner, 26, who waited an hour for an autograph.

The Italian model was in town Wednesday and Thursday promoting his romance novel, "Pirate," his perfume, "Mediterranean," and his CD of romantic musings, "Fabio After Dark."

"I've always loved Southern belles," said Fabio, 32. "They're very pretty and very genuine."

At a book signing, Fabio wore black cowboy boots, black pants and a black leather shirt — partially unbuttoned, of course.

Chris Whitley... busted

AUCKLAND, New Zealand (AP) — Singer Chris Whitley got the boot without even setting foot outside the airport after he was busted by a drug-sniffing dog.

Whitley arrived in New Zealand on Thursday morning and was expelled hours later because about 2 grams of marijuana was found in his shoe, authorities said.

The 32-year-old American singer is best known for the tune "Kick the Stones," featured on the soundtrack of the film "Thelma and Louise."

Whitley was scheduled as the headline act for the weekend Ponsonby Music Festival.
