downtown area almost obsolete. "For a long time, this community questioned the role of the downtown area after the building of Manor East and Post Oak Malls and other strip shopping centers, and there was a big decline in retail stores in downtown," she said. "There are a lot of people who have some really fond memories of the way downtown Bryan used to be. They remember when it was prosperous and busy. Our goal is to help make it that way what Main Street has to offer the area must contain many ferent kinds of businesses, w like Sixth Street.

Some residents, however, are worried about Main Street's evolution into an entertainment district, Miller said.

"It is really funny because some people say, 'Oh no! An-other bar on Main Street,'" Miller said, "What these people don't realize is that a bar or a nightclub is a business. This is not a moral issue. This is about business and tax base. This is something for the community. It's about saving a historic town.

T. C. Nguyen, owner of the Stafford Opera House, said the the Main Street area could be the city's version of Austin's Sixth Street.

The transformation of Main Street into the next Sixth Street Street into the next Sixth Street sounds very ambitious, but it could happen," he said. "It would be great if we could pull off something like that. We would need to get more people to support it and open up busi-nesses, but it could happen." Miller said that in order for residents of all ages to enjoy of town to see the acts they liked, Nguyen said. "Years ago, students got the idea that if they wanted to have fun and go to a bunch of unio clubs or see live music they had to go to Austin or Houston," had a "When they go to the other towns, they spend mon there and support the loca economy of that town," he sail 'We wanted to give these sh dents a reason to stay in town and I think we have.

Nick Symanovich, a junio biomedical sciences major w frequents the area, said he is ev cited about the area's emergent as a cultural district. "It is the the most cultural diverse area of Bryan-Colle Station, that's why I like i Symanovich said. "I like the cal music scene a lot and this the only place I can catch it. "I also like being able to go one place and have four or different options for clubs," said. "I can go in one place an if I don't like it, I can go some where else without having to drive all over town."
