American Airlines faces fines for animal deaths

The Associated Press

DALLAS — An investigation by the U.S. Department of Agriculture has alleged that about half a dozen pets have died in transport aboard American Airlines.

The pets have suffocated, frozen to death or been fatally crushed because of improper handling by the Fort-Worth-based carrier, according to the government agency.

The deaths occurred when the airline was transporting thousands of animals, an airline spokesman said Wednesday.

The complaint, released this week, said at least five dogs and one cat had died unnecessarily because of airline fault.

American could face a fine of up to $2,500 for each violation or possibly have its animal-carrying license cancelled, said Cynthia Eck, a spokeswoman for the Agriculture Department.

The airline has asked for time to respond to the charges.

A spokesman for American Airlines said he was certain the airline would be able to answer all charges.

"We're sincerely disappointed by the allegations since we feel we have a very good record of transporting animals," said American spokesman Gus Whitcomb.

"However, we fully intend to cooperate with the U.S. Department of Agriculture and are already in the midst of conducting our own investigation."

More than 50,000 animals, for families, zoos and breeders, were transported by American in the three-year period reviewed by the government, Whitcomb said.
