who are not able to attend this University, he said.

"Those that do not go to a college like A&M say that we are better than them, that is bullshit," he said.

Wilson said people must get past their ego problems and start raising each other."

"We need to re-establish a sense of community because we have been divided by economic, class and social situations," he said.

Wilson also addressed the lack of black faculty, administrators and students at Texas A&M.

"If Texas A&M scientists can invent and discover all of these things, next they need to create test tube black faculty members," he said.

process was a requirement but does not disagree with the process as long as it is handled in an equal and fair way.

"I think they have a right to know what programs are going on," he said.

Likewise, Meuret said he has no problem being under the direction of the student activities department but is confused about some of its regulations.

With 1,400 members in his organization, he questions what constitutes a program that is open to all students.

"I'm still concerned about when it is 'University-wide,'" he said.

The College Republicans want the rule describing the approval process in University Regulations changed, but they cannot get an answer from the University on how to change it, he said.

the program they wish to present.

Organizations must then get Adair's approval, not concerning the content of the program, but the mechanics of it.

"I think they have a right to know what programs are going on." - Joseph Thomas, president of Aggie Democrats

Meuret, president of the College Republicans, said this information should be included in the University Regulations to clarify what exactly is being approved - the speaker or the technicalities of the program.

Joseph Thomas, president of Aggie Democrats, said he was not aware that this approval

"I went to Weldon and wanted to know, did you call me sometime last year," Cassidy said. "And was there something I should have been alarmed at? He told me at the time there was nothing."

Cassidy added that after the brief interlude, "we went on about our business, talked about other things." Cassidy said Jaynes told him there was not anything in the discussion that should alert Cassidy to any possible violations.

"There was nothing that could have alarmed you to take any kind of action," Cassidy said. "(Jaynes) said I didn't say any more than that."

Texas A&M has been under scrutiny from the NCAA for a lack of institutional control in the monitoring of student-athlete employment.

The report claims that A&M "failed to undertake appropriate action" when learning that Hill and Brooks worked both for Gilbert Properties of Dallas, owned by Warren Gilbert, and Priester Supply Co. of Arlington, owned by Jaynes.

The NCAA report also included a letter that disassociated Gilbert from the University for an unspecified amount of time because Gilbert did not fully cooperate with A&M and the NCAA during the on-going investigation.

The letter, dated Oct. 21, 1993, was written by A&M Interim President E. Dean Gage and listed the specifics of Gilbert's disas-sociation that were contained in an earlier letter written by former President William Mobley. According to the conditions, the University cannot accept any money from Gilbert, and it will eliminate any contact Gilbert might have with the athletic program.

Gage said he is disappointed that such measures had to be taken.

"I regret that the University has been placed in the position of having to take this action due to the current NCAA allegations and rules violations and your unwillingness to cooperate in an interview or respond to questions in the investigation," Gage said in the letter. "However, the commitment of Texas A&M University to total integrity and rules compliance in our athletic programs is unequivocal with zero tolerance."

A&M's report culminated a 10-month investigation that began last December when The Dallas Morning News reported that five players were paid by Gilbert for work not performed. The report contained payroll documents, canceled checks, business applications for A&M's summer job program, compliance statements from the University concerning NCAA rules and regulations, letters from alumni and other documents.

A&M will present this information on Sunday to the NCAA Infractions Committee in Kansas City, Mo. A&M head coach R.C. Slocum, athletic director Wally Groff, Vice President for Finance and Administration Robert Smith, compliance director Tedi Zalesky, Gage, Mobley and Cassidy have been requested to appear.
