Husband acquitted of marital sexual assault

The Associated Press

MANASSAS, Va — John Bobbitt, whose wife cut off his penis in retaliation for alleged sexual abuse, was acquitted Wednesday of raping her. The jury rejected the argument that she "struck out at the very thing that harmed her."

Bobbitt's wife, Lorena, will be tried on Nov. 29 on a malicious wounding charge. She faces up to 20 years in prison, as her husband had on a charge of marital sexual assault.

The jury of nine women and three men deliberated about four hours before returning the verdict.

Bobbitt, 26, jumped from his chair and hugged his lawyer, Gregory Murphy, then buried his face in Murphy's shoulder as Bobbitt's aunt shouted, "Oh Lord, thank you!"

"Why did she cut his penis off? Something happened and I submit to you something sexual happened that offended her and drove her over the edge."

— Paul B. Ebert, prosecutor

Something happened and I submit to you something sexual happened that offended her and drove her over the edge," prosecutor Paul B. Ebert said.

She "struck out at the very thing that harmed her, the thing that hurt and she severed it," Ebert said.

Mrs. Bobbitt testified that her husband woke her, pinned her to their bed, yanked off her underwear and raped her. Bobbitt testified that he initiated sex and his wife didn't resist. Murphy said Mrs. Bobbitt concocted a story of sexual abuse because she was angry over the dissolution of their four-year marriage.

"The prosecution tells you that two wrongs don't make a right. Well, that's right," Murphy told the jury. "The emasculation of John Bobbitt is the first wrong. The second wrong is the fabrication of facts in this case."

After cutting off her husband's penis, Mrs. Bobbitt said, she fled their apartment and threw the severed organ out her car window.

Police found it in the grass and it was reattached in a nine-hour operation.

Battalion a week ago criticizing the builders of Bonfire in his hall, Aston Hall, for yelling, banging on residents' doors, playing loud music and striking a flagpole with an ax handle outside of Aston Hall.

White said this is a clear example of violating the rules. "It seems cut and dry to me," he said. "It's against regulations."

Dr. Malon Southerland, interim assistant vice president for student services, said students should adhere to the University policies.

"If the policy is in the Department of Student Affairs guide for residence halls, then it should be followed," Southerland said.

But Damon Flowers, a Bonfire crew chief from Aston Hall, said Bonfire should be an exception to the rule.

"He (White) has a point that ax handles and loud noise in the hall is forbidden," said Flowers, a junior biomedical science major. "That violates policy."

"But I also believe there's a time and a place when we are not causing harm to him or anyone else."

Chris Thompson, president of the Residence Hall Association and a senior industrial engineering major, said policies are overlooked because Bonfire is such an important Aggie tradition.

"But if it starts to turn it into a negative thing, then we should rethink it," he said.

The resident director and the resident advisers of the hall usually tolerate the wake-up procedures, he said.

"The yellow pots have to go to the resident director, and the resident director will approve it as long as he doesn't receive complaints," he said.

Each hall has one yellow pot who leads that hall at Bonfire and four or five crew chiefs who organize the hall's Bonfire effort.

Rusty Thompson, an adviser for the yellow pots and coordinator of Residence Life for the north side, said the yellow pots and the resident directors get together at the beginning of the semester and establish the guidelines for wakeup calls.

"The resident directors encourage the yellow pots to knock only on the doors of the guys who want to go," Rusty Thompson said.

This policy works well at first, but then people start to see what they can get away with, Rusty Thompson said.

Bob Wiatt, director of the University Police Department, said UPD has received at least one call every weekend since Bonfire cut began.

"We've tried to address these complaints and asked them to calm it down," Wiatt said. "But sometimes their exuberance takes over and they don't know how loud it carries."

Wiatt said UPD has received fewer complaints this year than in previous years.

Chris Thompson said the wakeup calls have gotten a lot less outrageous since he came to A&M four years ago when an ambulance siren was once used to wake up cadets in the Corps.

"But it's getting a lot stricter now," he said. "But if we didn't make noise, it wouldn't get built."

But, White said, a lot of the "good bull" that goes along with Bonfire has stopped.

Since White's letter was published in The Battalion, he said he has been harassed both verbally and physically.

"A guy screamed at me and hung up," he said. "And last week, in the middle of the night, somebody took some shaving cream and drew a pentagram on my door."

White said someone also left a cup of urine outside of his door so he would knock it over when he walked out.

"It's sort of scary when they can come by whenever they want," he said. "I'm surprised the administration hasn't done anything about it."

White said he received some support, however, after the last incidents.

"After that, people started to come by, and they were amazed," he said. "They said 'These guys are barbarians.'"

White said he is surprised that he has gotten such little support from students and the administration.

White said he hoped his letter would cause the University to look into this practice.

"I was hoping it would be calmly disarmed, but they seem rather arrogant about it, like they are not going to be stopped," White said.
