

Perry

Perry said one area he believes will help Texas farmers and ranchers is to increase processing of their commodities in the state. He said his department has been active in helping new processing ventures find capital. "There are still so many people out there who don't realize agriculture's importance in providing job opportunities and strengthening the economy," he said. "In the past three years, we've helped put almost 5,000 people to work while creating an additional $450 million in economic impact."

Perry said he might consider running for the U.S. Senate in 1996, but added, "There are a lot of ifs that would have to be put in place, a great many as a matter of fact." One of those, he said, would be the election next year of a Republican governor to appoint his successor.

"If George W. Bush is the governor of the state of Texas, I would probably consider doing that. If Ann Richards is the governor of the state of Texas, I can assure you I will stay as the agriculture commissioner of the state," he said.

South Africa could not safely make the transition to democracy unless the standard of living for blacks, who make up the majority of the population, improved.

He said it was crucial for the United States to "encourage commercial activity, encourage stability, encourage economic growth through trade."

Brown, who is black, said the civil rights struggle in the United States had proven that "legal equality is not the end. It is only the beginning."

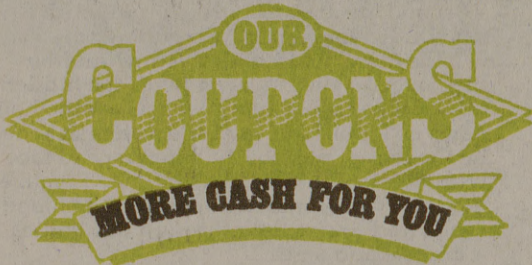

"Apartheid created vast inequities that threaten economic growth ... and threaten the stability of the government to be elected next April," he said.

South Africa holds its first national election to include blacks on April 27.

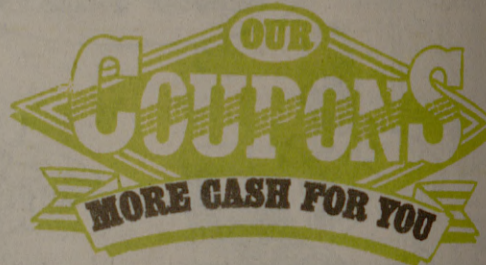

Brown arrived Saturday and returns to Washington on Wednesday.
