The additional tests, bringing the total to 1,051, were concealed in an attempt to keep the Soviets from finding out about them. Nevertheless, the Soviets all along have claimed there have been 1,080 U.S. tests.
"They were pretty damn close," said Roger Heusser, deputy director of classification at the department. The Soviet surveillance was not always on target, however. In at least two cases, they lodged diplomatic protests of tests when, in fact, none occurred.
Private researchers previously have estimated that there were about 940 U.S. tests.
Other declassified data disclosed that:
- The government since the 1940s produced 102 metric tons of plutonium and that about a third of it (32.5 metric tons) continues to exist in various forms at weapons facilities in Washington state, South Carolina, Colorado, Idaho and New Mexico.
- About 24 million pounds of mercury is believed to have been used at the Y-12 weapons plant at Oak Ridge, Tenn., but that "incomplete records ... prevent a fully accurate accounting of the quantities received, used, and lost to the environment."

"We've come a long way this semester," said. "Every desk has learned a lot."
Phillips said she is looking forward to continuing the efforts of the fall semester to improve newspaper's layout and design, but she is excited about doing new things with the paper.
Making sure everyone on the staff communicates is one of Phillips' main goals, she said.
"I have all the faith in the world in the Phillips said of the spring staff. "I know everything will fall together if everyone is comfortable with what they are doing."
"I also want to get us involved in activities outside of the newspaper."
Phillips said this is important so that others realize the staff members are human.
When her term as editor ends, Phillips said she hopes she can look back and see that everyone on the staff has grown and improved their work.
