NCAA

for work they did not perform. The nine players were employed at Wheatland Terrace Apartments in Dallas, which is owned by Gilbert.

A&M head coach R.C. Slocum said the NCAA's decision was fair, but he disagreed with the system in which the decision was made. He said an entire institution should not be punished for the actions of a few.

"I couldn't be more disappointed," Slocum said. "It's one of the real unfortunate things about the system. If a player breaks a rule, he should be punished. If a booster violates the rules, he should be punished. But don't punish an institution and our innocent students and former students."

Although the final report did not stipulate that the University had any direct part in the incident, it found A&M had a lack of "institutional control" in its summer job program. The summer job program also was the focus of NCAA sanctions in 1989.

Since the sanctions were handed out, A&M interim president E. Dean Gage has moved the authority of the summer job program away from the athletic department to the career placement center.

"Our position clearly is to build upon the strengths we've been working so hard for the compliance program to build," Gage said. "We will continue to do everything possible in our ability to accomplish our goals of complete compliance." Gage said he had "no real thought" about a possible lawsuit against Gilbert.

The sanctions came at the peak recruiting period for college football. Although Slocum said A&M will have a good recruiting year, the sanctions have had a negative impact.

"It's something that has been used by our rival coaches," Slocum said. "They've used it to try to paint a bleak picture of our program."

The ramifications from the NCAA's actions have a more far-reaching effect than just Texas A&M.

The Southwest Conference as a whole will be affected by the loss of television revenue that A&M usually brings. Texas A&M had 10 televised games this season, including nationally televised games against Louisville and Texas, and Notre Dame in the Mobil Cotton Bowl.

That television money as well as bowl appearance money is split up between the eight conference schools. With A&M ineligible for television or a bowl game, the loss of revenue will put the squeeze on smaller schools, such as Texas Christian University.

"It's more of a sanction to the rest of the conference than it is to A&M," said Frank Windegger, TCU athletic director. "The only

Monday: Mostly sunny, colder; highs in 60s, lows in 30s

Tuesday: Continued sunny and cold; highs in 50s, lows in 20s

Extended: Partly cloudy; highs in 40s increasing to 60s thing I was disappointed in was that I thought they (the NCAA) were moving away from TV sanctions. If they're going to use that, then make them play A&M on TV, but don't let them get any money from it."
