Program to help return lost Alzheimer patients

The Associated Press

NEVADA, Iowa — At first, there was the memory loss so common to Alzheimer's patients. Myrtle Fitzgerald could no longer remember things that had been ingrained in her since childhood, such as family recipes.

Then came her wandering, even under the watchful eye of Don, her husband.

"I lost her a couple of times. She was always on the go," he said.

Once, during a trip to the grocery store, he didn't know what happened to her until he saw police in the parking lot.

"I noticed the police car and an officer talking to a lady. I figured that was a good place to start.

"This lady turned around and said, 'Is that her sitting in the front seat of my car?' I looked and sure enough, it was Myrtle sitting in there."

Some Alzheimer's patients aren't as lucky as Mrs. Fitzgerald, 73, who has been living at a care center in Story City since last February. Some wander and aren't found.

The national Alzheimer's Association is encouraging families to enroll loved ones in its new Safe Return Program. For a $25 one-time fee, patients receive bracelets and necklaces inscribed with their name and a toll-free, 24-hour telephone number linked to a nationwide network of 17,000 police agencies.

The family also received labels that can be sewn into Alzheimer's patients' clothing and a wallet with an identification card.

Memory loss, confusion and disorientation are some of the more recognizable symptoms of Alzheimer's disease, which afflicts four million Americans.

Wandering "is a significant part of this disease," said Carol Dingley, national coordinator for the association's Safe Return Program.

"I think every caregiver should keep in mind that even though a person with Alzheimer's disease has not exhibited wandering behavior and it may not be a problem behavior at any particular point, every individual who has the disease is at risk of wandering," she said.

More than 2,100 people patients have been enrolled in the program since its inception last April, according to Linda Robertson, a spokeswoman for the Alzheimer's Association in Chicago. To date, she said, the program has helped find 38 missing patients.

"It's a program designed to help the person with Alzheimer's but it also gives peace of mind for family members," Dingley said.

Bobbitt's not alone: man's testicles cut off by wife in '92

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — John Bobbitt is not the only man in America whose wife took a sharp instrument to his genitals. But Jaime Macias, whose testicles were cut off with scissors, has received far less notoriety.

The attack occurred in the early hours of Sept. 20, 1992. Macias woke from a drunken stupor about 4 a.m. and felt a burning pain between his legs, both attorneys said.

Deputy District Attorney Larry Longo contends Macias' 34-year-old wife, Aurelia, was angry at her 36-year-old husband for dancing with other women at a neighbor's party and severed his testicles after he passed out.

Los Angeles Police Officer Brad Rhodes responded to a family member's 911 call. Mrs. Macias, speaking in Spanish, told police "something to the effect that he was cheating on her and she wanted to keep him from cheating on her again," Rhodes said.

A bloody pair of 5-inch-long, chrome-plated scissors was found on the kitchen table. "She had that hate look in her eyes," Rhodes said of Mrs. Macias. "She wasn't emotionally upset."

His maiming has remained relatively obscure because, unlike Bobbitt, Macias refuses to talk about it. Also unlike Bobbitt, he has forgiven his wife and wishes nothing more than to resume their life together.

"Mr. Macias wishes that the case would be over with so they can go on with their lives," said Nan Whitfield, public defender for "He has forgiven his wife. He just wishes the D.A. would."

Grand jury to indict shooter in subway deaths

The Associated Press

MINEOLA, N.Y. — A grand jury will hand up an indictment Tuesday charging the man accused in a shooting rampage on a commuter train that left six people dead, a source told The Associated Press.

The charges against Colin Ferguson were not disclosed by the source, who spoke only on the condition of anonymity.

Nassau County District Attorney Denis Dillon scheduled a news conference for Tuesday to discuss the indictment.

Ferguson's court-appointed attorney, Anthony Falanga, said he was tentatively told that Ferguson would be arraigned on any charges on Wednesday.

"I don't know what the charges are, but we can only speculate that the indictment will certainly include murder, weapons charges and assault," Falanga said.

Six people were killed and 19 were injured in the Dec. 7 rampage on a crowded Long Island Rail Road commuter train.

Ferguson, 35, of New York City, has been held without bail on four murder charges in the shooting. A Nassau County judge ruled on Jan. 7 that Ferguson was competent to stand trial, clearing the way for the grand jury to begin hearing evidence in the case.

When he was arrested, Ferguson, who is black, carried handwritten papers in which he railed against what called injustices perpetrated by whites, Asians and "Uncle Tom" blacks, authorities said.

Falanga said he was considering pursuing an insanity defense.

Somali warlords reach peace agreement

The Associated Press

MOGADISHU, Somalia — The warring clans of Mogadishu reached a peace agreement Sunday and promised to punish people who violate it under harsh Islamic laws.

The two warlords who control the divided city, Gen. Mohamed Farrah Aidid and Ali Mahdi Mohamed, did not attend the three-day conference, or appear to send any of their top aides to it.

But it could put pressure on them because both belong to the clans that reached the agreement under the leadership of an influential clan elder, Imam Mohamed Imam Omar.

Aidid and Ali Mahdi's forces have fought many times along the cease-fire line separating northern and southern Mogadishu.

And many people believe that Aidid — who recently escaped a harsh U.S. military crackdown and who wants all U.N. forces to leave the country — still hopes to take over Somalia and become its leader.

The peace agreement also comes at a time when many clans reportedly are rearming and erecting defenses in preparation for battle after the U.S. military finishes withdrawing by March 31.

"I believe this meeting is fruitful because the people are fed up with war and they want peace," Omar told a news conference after the agreement was signed at a hotel in northern Mogadishu.

"Ali Mahdi and Aidid are clansmen, so they must follow the agreements reached by their clans," he said, shortly after the conference ended with hundreds of clan members and delegates cheering, chanting and praying to Allah with their heads bowed.

Neither warlord was immediately available for comment Sunday in a city where most people rush home as soon as the sun sets to avoid being robbed and shot by its many roving bandits.

Italian Ambassador Mario Scialoja, who briefly visited Omar during Sunday's closing session, spoke to reporters: "This could produce a breakthrough in the political process of this city in a few weeks if it remains popular among the clans. ... That could happen even though Ali Mahdi and Aidid weren't here."

Although the United Nations reportedly paid for the delegates' accommodations and security at the hotel, its officials did not attend the meeting. If they had, Aidid probably would have immediately rejected the agreement.

Peace talks in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, in December collapsed, and Aidid blamed the breakdown in part on U.N. interference.

The peace agreement signed Sunday by elders from several clans, including Aidid's Habre-Gedirs and Ali Mahdi's Agbals, says the clans will come together and live in peace in Mogadishu.

It says the clansmen must forgive each other for the 350,000 deaths and widespread destruction that occurred during the warfare and famine that followed the overthrow of dictator Mohamed Siad Barre in January 1991. People who stole property during the mayhem must return it in accordance with Islamic law.

The peace agreement also urges Mogadishu's clans to crack down on all bandits in the city, even their own clansmen.
