chose Inman, Dole hailed Inman as a "very good person for the job," but criticized Clinton for trying to make "big, big defense cuts."

Inman said that "my family was not enthusiastic about my return to public service." Inman said his wife had specifically asked him to promise that a former domestic worker not be embarrassed because the Inmans had not paid required Social Security taxes, an issue that came to light shortly after Clinton announced the nomination.

"Now she's afraid she might lose her house," Inman said of his former housekeeper. He said he recently paid back Social Security taxes even though he believed he was not required by law to do so and planned to hire a lawyer to help the former employee resolve any outstanding tax issues.

Inman, 62, ended three decades of government service in 1982, when he resigned as deputy director of the Central Intelligence Agency. He also is a former director of the National Security Agency. At the time he left the CIA post, he said he had lost his zest for bureaucratic infighting.

When he accepted Clinton's nomination in December, Inman said he neither sought nor wanted the job, but accepted it out of "duty and country."

Clinton's choice of Inman to succeed Defense Secretary Les Aspin was widely praised on Capitol Hill. Clinton announced his choice of Inman on Dec. 16, just a day after Aspin had been forced to resign. At the time, Clinton praised the retired Navy admiral's intellect, integrity and leadership.

Aspin had said he would stay on until a successor was confirmed. Inman's confirmation hearings were scheduled to begin next week in the Senate.

Inman was expected to face questions about his private-sector dealings with the defense industry. In addition, Inman told the White House he had failed to pay Social Security taxes for a domestic helper. He paid about $7,000 in back taxes.

However, the White House had insisted the matter would not disqualify him as a candidate.

After retiring from the Navy in 1982, Inman worked with a number of high-tech and computer information companies in Texas. More recently, he has remained in Austin and done consulting work, served on corporate boards and taught at the University of Texas.

Inman earned nearly $1 million in 1989 from Tracor Inc., a defense contractor he headed for two years, according to records on file with the Securities and Exchange Commission. Inman received $422,000 in salary, $250,000 in deferred compensation and a $300,000 bonus from the previous year.
