the coach wants it, but I just don't want to lose the Holler House. I guess I just want to have my cake and eat it, too." In other business, the regents deferred voting on a resolution stating the University would not build any additional residence halls or on campus apartments pending a reasonable time period and adequate demonstration by the private sector of development. Dr. Gage said the purpose of the resolution was to clarify the University's position on the matter to the community.

Dr. Rick Floyd, interim food services director and associate vice president for finance and administration, said local lenders always ask him what the University's plans are in regards to housing. "Lenders are reluctant to come into the market unless they know what our plans are," Floyd said. Gage said the University has an enrollment management policy to deal with a housing shortage if it occurs and told the regents the University did not want to get into overbuilding. However, some of the regents thought the wording of the resolution was inappropriate.

Regent Billy Clayton said he thought by passing a resolution the regents would be entering into a binding agreement. "Let not get our hands tied on this," he said.

Regent Lupe Rangel said the regents can't shirk their responsibility of housing students should the need arise.

In other business, the regents: • heard a report from Tom Williams, PTIS director, about the status of parking on West Campus. • were briefed on the status of widening Texas Avenue • heard a request for a budget adjustment for the Bush Presidential Library Center.

White House to test proposed welfare program in Florida

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In a preview of the president's plan to overhaul the nation's welfare system, the Clinton administration gave Florida permission Thursday to experiment with time-limited benefits and subsidies to employers who hire welfare recipients. A senior administration official said Florida's demonstration project is significant because it mirrors President Clinton's efforts to expand education, training and child-care for parents on welfare while limiting their benefits to two years. In his State of the Union address Tuesday, Clinton promised to introduce welfare-reform legislation this spring. Although the administration has outlined its plan in broad terms, it has yet to make the tough decisions about costs and financing. Seventeen Senate Republicans, including Minority Leader Bob Dole, tried to upstage Clinton by introducing their own plan Thursday. Similar to the House Republicans' bill, the Senate measure would require more welfare recipients to work, limit aid to immigrants, and force unmarried teen-age mothers to live with a parent to qualify for welfare. In Florida, parents who participate in the demonstration will be allowed to collect welfare for a maximum of 24 months in any five-year period. While on the rolls, parents will be eligible for training, education, child care, health insurance and intensive case management. The Clinton administration also wants to limit welfare benefits to 24 months over a certain length of time, the senior administration official said. Its plan will also include counseling, education or training, and help with child care for recipients preparing to leave the rolls. In Florida, the state will guarantee a minimum-wage job for recipients unable to locate work at the end of 24 months, according to the federal Department of Health and Human Services. The state will offer incentive payments to private companies that hire welfare recipients. Employer subsidies will also be an element of the Clinton plan, the administration official said. "Able-bodied people who want to work will get the chance to work and those who don't want to work will be out the door in two years. Those who truly can't work will be unaffected by this new program," said Jim Towey, secretary of Florida's Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services. Parents who refuse to comply will lose their share of the family's welfare check. Payments to the children could continue, but only through a third party. The "Family Transition Program" will operate for eight years in two counties — Alachua and Escambia — beginning next month. Two hundred welfare families in each county will be enrolled during the first 60 days. Other families will be added later, but the state says it's too early to say how many will ultimately be affected. Combined, the two counties have 10,800 families on the rolls of Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC). As of October, Florida had 254,000 AFDC families statewide. The experiment required a waiver of federal regulations governing AFDC, a state-federal welfare program that supports 5 million low-income families nationwide, most of them headed by a single mother. Under Florida's plan, parents in the experiment who leave welfare for work will be given day-care assistance for two years. They will also receive six to 12 months of Medicaid after finding a job.
