Driving While Intoxicated

Both Groff and Associate Athletic Director for Women Lynn Hickey agreed that a move to the Big Eight would provide credibility for many of A&M's athletic programs.
 "Surfing, for women's basketball, would be a great conference," Hickey said. "If we moved today, the (new) conference would have three teams in the top 10. For women's basketball it would be a step up."
 Men's basketball from the SWC would give instant credibility with a move to the Big Eight, Groff said.
 Hickey said if the move was made, schools of the SWC would experience basketball in different environments than they have seen in Texas.
 "It would be totally different," she said. "Members of the former Southwest Conference will learn about crowds and atmosphere in the basketball program."

Felony Theft

A&M

Gage said. "With all of the restructuring on the national level, the reality of the issues are much different this time."
 Officials in A&M's athletic department felt the move would be beneficial to A&M and would get A&M out of a conference that had grown stagnant.
 "I believe it would be a good move," Groff said. "The Southwest Conference is at a standstill, and if you're not going forward, you're going backward."
 Head football coach R.C. Slocum agreed with Groff and said the SWC has been in decline for a number of years.
 "The Southwest Conference has had a number of problems," Slocum said. "It has been headed in a negative direction for several years. I think this is a positive new direction for A&M to go in."
 The financial effects of the move would benefit A&M as well, Groff said.
 "Financially, it will be nothing but a gain," Groff said. "The way I understand it, we stand to gain quite a bit."
 Groff said the additional funds A&M could receive might be used in a number of ways. Women's programs could get more funding to try and comply with Title IX (the gender equity law) requirements and the athletic department could be self-supporting, he added.
 "It would be nice to be self-supporting," Groff said. "Right now the University uses funds to help support the athletic department. If we were self-supporting, those funds could be used for academics."
