on advertising and promotions helps convince kids they are joining "the 5-S club - that they're slim, they're sexy, they're sociable, they're sophisticated, and successful."

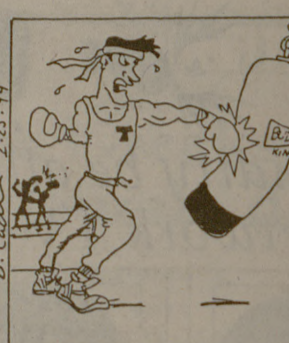

"The teen-ager gets an image, the tobacco companies get an addict," said Elders. "We must fight back."

The Tobacco Institute agreed that young people should not smoke, but spokesman Thomas Lauria said, "there's little in this report that would substantiate the allegation that we're trying to hook kids." Cigarette ads are "aimed at the 46 million to 50 million American adults who smoke," he added.

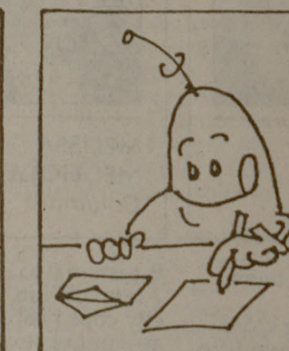

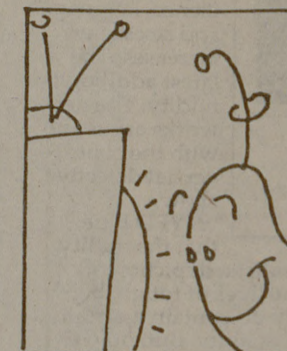

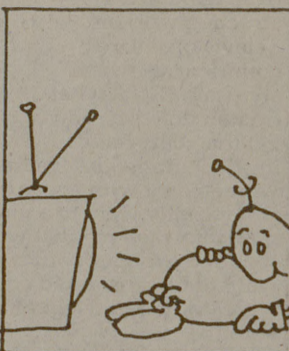

The surgeon general's report on smoking concluded that if teen-agers stay smoke-free until high school graduation, "most will stay that way forever."

"Most adolescent smokers are addicted to nicotine and report that they want to quit but are unable to do so," it said.

Retreat

Patricia Wilder, U-ACT executive of registration and follow up, said the atmosphere of the retreat allows student leaders to be comfortable and open with each other.

"It gives them a chance to ask questions that they've always wanted to ask but have been afraid to," she said. "No one gets offended."

Wilder said the retreat usually produces positive feedback.

"The feedback that I've gotten is that U-ACT gives people a lot to think about," she said. "We don't want to change the way they think. We just want to give them a different outlook."
