Nursing home employee charged in sexual assault of paralyzed woman

The Associated Press
SAN ANTONIO - A man has been charged with sexually assaulting a 32-year-old paralyzed nursing home resident who became pregnant and then lost the baby, authorities say.
Dennis Paul Wallace, 39, was charged with sexual assault and released Sunday from Bexar County Jail after posting a $25,000 bond.
A report identified Wallace as a nursing home employee, according to The San Antonio Express-News' editions Monday.
Police said they received a tip that a man told workers at Four Seasons Nursing Home he feared the woman had become pregnant because of his sexual contact with her.
The victim has been paralyzed from the neck down and unable to speak since 1980 when she was sexually assaulted and shot in the head, according to police and court records.
Marynell Maloney, an attorney representing the woman and her mother, said the woman can shake her head in response to yes-or-no questions.
On Feb. 11, officials said, the mother was told her daughter was pregnant. The woman, six months pregnant, went into labor Feb. 17 and a stillborn infant was delivered the next day at University Hospital.
