A&M students place in construction contest

Six Texas A&M students won second place in a national construction management competition held at the National Association of Home Builders' annual convention last month.

The winning team consisted of Karin Brethauer, David Teel, Rhett Bain, Stephen Knight, Peter Stein and Warren Stromberg.

Off Campus Housing Fair runs today in MSC

More than 50 property management companies and service providers will be at the Off Campus Housing Fair Wednesday from 10 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. in the MSC.

The event is sponsored by the Off Campus Aggies and the Off Campus Center.

Prizes will be given at the event as well.

College of Engineering offers new scholarship

Joe and Patty Mueller of Corpus Christi have endowed an undergraduate scholarship in support of the College of Engineering's Phase One Program.

The Mueller's, who recently presented the first $20,000 of their $100,000 pledge, serve on the College of Engineering External Advisory and Development Council.

Institute holds meeting on decision-making

Texas A&M's Military Studies Institute will sponsor a symposium titled "Decision Making on War & Peace: The Cognitive-Rational Debate" Thursday and Friday in Room 292 of Rudder Tower.

Alex Mintz, professor of political science and director of the Program in Foreign Policy Decision Making, will coordinate the symposium.

The symposium will be from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Thursday and from 9 a.m. to 12 p.m. Friday.

APO helps University recycle phone books

Brazos Valley Beautiful will sponsor a telephone book recycling drive this week.

Students and faculty members wanting to donate their old phone books can drop them off at the Alpha Phi Omega office in the Koldus Building.

Local elementary schools are participating in the contest to see who can donate the most phone books.

Phone books given to APO will be divided evenly among the schools, and the school that gets the most phone books will receive a cash prize.

Organizers expect more than 50 tons of phone books to be donated.

UT athlete seeks damages after alleged initiation partially paralyzes him

The Associated Press

AUSTIN — Freshman Dusty Dunfield was the University of Texas on a track scholarship hoping to become a star runner. Now he's just to be able to walk.

As part of an alleged track team initiation, Dunfield dove into a shallow campus fountain. He broke his neck in the August incident and doctors feared he would be paralyzed forever.

Dunfield, 19, is back home in Brenham. He regained use of his hands and feet, but he'll never run again.

"It's pretty tragic," said attorney Bill Whitehurst of Austin.

Whitehurst is trying to obtain a settlement from the state, UT, four track team members and at least two fraternities for unspecified damages on behalf of Dunfield. No lawsuit has been filed.

Whitehurst blames the four track team members for proposing that Dunfield jump into the fountain. He also accuses them of taking the teenager to a party, where the fraternities served alcohol, which would make both liable for Dunfield being drunk at the time of the incident.

Hazing, which is illegal, has long been a problem among fraternities at UT. In 1992, attention was drawn to initiation among athletic teams when several male swim team members were found smeared with peanut butter and wearing diapers.

According to Whitehurst, Dunfield was a new track team member who would have to dive into an area lake from a cliff.

As Dunfield and the four track team members were walking back from the party where Dunfield had about a dozen beers, the track team members gave him the option of diving into the fountain. Instead, the attorney said.

"Everyone urged him to do it," Whitehurst said. "They knew he was intoxicated."

The fraternities that allegedly threw the party were Delta Chi and Delta Sigma Phi. A third Greek organization also may have been involved but which one has not been determined, Whitehurst said.

The presidents of those two fraternities said they had no comment. There was no immediate comment from the four track members alleged to be involved.

School president Robert Berdahl did not immediately return a telephone call from The Associated Press Tuesday.

"It's up to the plaintiff's attorney to either file a lawsuit or request a meeting," said Ron Dusek, spokesman in the attorney general's office.

"We'll be happy to meet with them but it does not mean there is any liability on the state part just because we met with them. We're always willing to get together and meet with them to discuss the issues."

Whitehurst said he hopes to reach a settlement but he expects it to be difficult because the case involves multiple issues with several parties.

"I think we have a solid case," said Whitehurst, who has sued two other fraternities over alleged hazing incidents.

Storm

in West and North Texas reduced what already was expected to be a low voter turnout.

"Historically, voter turnout tends to be low in bad weather and that's certainly a concern today as well," Bell said.

Holtz said the storm could spawn thunderstorms and possible tornados as it moved southeast through Texas.

Any moisture was a welcome sight in the Panhandle, where crops in fields were drier than normal.

"Most of the wheat farmers are probably jumping for joy," Holtz said. "We needed it pretty bad."

A cold front was positioned across the state on Tuesday. High pressure over the southeast maintained a flow of low level moisture into South Texas and up over the front into North Texas.

Low clouds covered North Texas, along with patches of fog and drizzle, on Tuesday. Scattered showers dampened North Central Texas.

The National Weather Service issued a winter storm watch for the western parts of North Texas for late Tuesday night and early Wednesday. The affected area is generally northwest of a line through Abilene, Eastland, Mineral Wells and Bowie.

The weather service said snow flurries are possible on Wednesday from the Panhandle to the Midland-Odessa area and beyond, with highs in the 30s in the Panhandle.

North Texas had grey skies with intermittent rain and dropping temperatures on Tuesday. Western portions of North Texas are under a winter storm watch through Wednesday. The weather service said total snow accumulations of 3 to 5 inches are possible Wednesday morning in the west and 1 to 3 inches of snow elsewhere.
