Government officials said privately that a total of 38 Patriot batteries are planned to be deployed at U.S. military bases in the country.

The timing of this year's "Team Spirit" exercises will be decided after Kim visits Japan and China this week, the spokesman said.

The nuclear problem is expected to be a major topic in talks between Kim, and Japanese and Chinese leaders.

Kim noted that such military measures are in order, because the North has failed to honor its part of a deal with the United States, in which it promised to allow full nuclear checks and swap inter-Korea envoys, Choo said.

President Clinton sent a personal letter to Kim confirming Washington's firm security commitment to South Korea, Choo said.

In the letter passed through U.S. Ambassador James Laney, Clinton said Washington would consider any North Korean invasion of South Korea an invasion of the United States, the spokesman said.

In a strongly worded statement Monday, North Korea said it would make good on its year-old threat to withdraw from the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, the 1968 international accord to check the spread of nuclear weapons technology.
