Missing grandmother's body believed found

The Associated Press

WAXAHACHIE — A woman whose body was found Tuesday at the supercollider site is believed to be that of a woman who was missing after her grandson was found dead in a car, authorities said.

A worker at the idled collider project discovered the body shortly before noon along a ditch of Texas Farm-to-Market Road 66 southwest of Waxahachie. Ellis County Sheriff John Gage said the victim appears to be Robbie Jean Biggar.

"We have a photograph and we compared the photograph to that of the lady," Gage told radio station WBAP. "She is not in real good condition — the body isn't — but it does appear that it is the lady. Everything looks similar so we are pretty sure it is."

He told the station that the woman appeared to have been shot twice, once in the head.

Justice of the Peace Curtis Polk ordered an autopsy by the Dallas County medical examiner's office, said sheriff's Lt. Royce Gothard.

He said the fully clothed body was found just a mile southwest of the collider's lab facility. The SSC is about 30 miles south of Dallas.

Biggar's 2-year-old grandson, Kasey Wyatt Roberts, was found dead Sunday inside the woman's abandoned car.
