Korea to ask China for help in stando

The Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea — Tensions on the world's most heavily armed border escalated Tuesday, with North Korea accusing South Korea of provoking war, and South Korea saying it needs better security to ensure peace.

South Korean President Kim Young-sam said he would ask China, North Korea's only major ally, to help ease the nuclear standoff on the divided peninsula.

North Korea's official news agency called South Korea's plans to deploy Patriot missiles and conduct military exercises with the United States "provocative steps ... and a declaration of war."

North Korea, after refusing to allow full inspections of sites where it is suspected of developing nuclear weapons, threatened Monday to pull out of an international nuclear controls treaty. That could lead to a U.S. push for international sanctions.

"If pressure is applied on this issue, that can only complicate the situation on the Korean peninsula and it will add to the tension there."

China has backed efforts to get North Korea to permit the inspections. But Chinese Premier Li Peng suggested Tuesday that China would not support economic sanctions.

"If pressure is applied on this issue, that can only complicate the situation on the Korean peninsula and it will add to the tension there," Li said in Beijing.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Michael McCurry said Chinese officials have indicated their willingness to work with the States on the Korean situation.

Tensions have risen sharply in the past because of the North Korea's refusal to allow nuclear inspections or to exchange envoys with South Korea. The envoys were to have discussed ways to make the peninsula nuclear-free.

On Monday, Pyongyang renewed a nuclear threat to withdraw from the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, which it joined in 1985.

The International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna, referred the issue to the U.N. Security Council, opening the way for possible sanctions.

No proposal for sanctions has been made by any of the five permanent members of the Security Council: the United States, France, Britain, China and Russia — were meeting privately Tuesday afternoon to discuss the North Korean situation.

McCurry said a resolution warning North Korea it risked sanctions could be ready for U.N. Security Council consideration later in the week.

Egyptian gunbattles leave 13 dead

The Associated Press

ASSIUT, Egypt — Police and Muslim militants fought more than 12 hours of gunbattles overnight and Monday, leaving 13 militants and security officers dead in extremist village strongholds in southern Egypt.

The battles in troubled Assiut province were a marked increase in the violence surrounding the radicals' campaign to topple the secular government and impose strict Islamic rule in Egypt.

Interior Minister Hassan el-Alfy mentioned that the latest attacks by radicals were acts of desperation under pressure from security forces.

"What they're doing is no more than trying to show they exist," he was quoted as saying by the state-owned Middle East News Agency.

Security sources said el-Alfy ordered 3,000 police from Cairo to take over three of Assiut's most violence-ridden villages. El-Alfy, the country's chief police official, said informers were providing exact information on the militants.

However, the radicals have succeeded in slaying police on an almost daily basis in southern Egypt. They killed four policemen and wounded five others, including two high-ranking officers, in the attack that started the overnight confrontation.

In the militants' two-years campaign of violence, more than 330 people have been killed, including government officials, police, militants, Coptic Christians and four foreign tourists. The government has arrested thousands and sentenced 51 people to die, 32 of whom already have been executed.

The latest violence began with an attack on police in the Nile River village of Sidfa and ended in the morning as police in armored personnel carriers battled the radicals in the nearby village of Abu Tig.

Airport opening brings first relief flight to Bosnia

The Associated Press

TUZLA, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Crowds waved and children sang yellow flowers sang Bosnia songs Tuesday as a U.N. plane, carrying 22 tons of food and medicine, flew to the city in almost two years of war.

"It's a great day for the people of Tuzla," said Yasushi Akashi, the U.N. envoy to former Yugoslavia.

"Opening of the airport marks the arrival of peace at long last."

In a ceremony on the tarmac, Tuzla's Mayor Selim Beslic blessed the box of seeds.

"I hope, like these seeds, the peace and hope will keep growing in this city and the whole country," he said.

"We hope this is the beginning of the peaceful period for Bosnia-Herzegovina," Beslic replied.

Tuzla, in northeastern Bosnia, is under control of the Muslim government of Bosnia. The reopening of the airport, a major goal of U.N. officials, was blocked for months by Serbs, whose big guns can reach the tarmac.

The actual reopening of the airport to be more symbolic than practical. Truck convoys carrying relief supplies have been reaching the city through Serb-held territory recently with relatively few delays.

And Croats and Muslims, who are fighting in central Bosnia, blocked convoys, signed a cease-fire in February and last week created a federation in Bosnia.

Jail blaze kills 21 prisoners in voting protest

The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Twenty-one prisoners were killed by flames and smoke Monday after barricading themselves in their communal cell and setting it on fire to protest their exclusion from South Africa's first all-race vote, officials said.

Prison officials linked the fire to demonstrations at prisons across the country by inmates demanding voting rights.

At Pietermaritzburg late Monday, protesting prisoners used beds as battering rams to force their way from their cells into the main courtyard, where they were in a standoff with guards and army troops called in as reinforcements.

Pietermaritzburg is about 300 miles east of Johannesburg.

In a statement, the Department of Correctional Services blamed the fire deaths and other disturbances on the "irresponsible" call for protests by a prison rights group.

Golden Miles Bhudu of the South African Prisoners' Organization said his group had called for peaceful protests, and that prison officials could have prevented violence.

The deaths occurred at Queenstown Prison, about 500 miles south of Johannesburg.

Department spokesman Col. Chris Olckers said that over the weekend, some of the men who died in the fire had joined weekend demonstrations that included marches, hunger strikes and other fires.

Two inmates were killed Saturday near Cape Town in a cell fire, Olckers said.

A Queenstown guard saw smoke coming from the cell just before noon Monday.

Firefighters were called and prison guards ran to help, but they found the prisoners had stacked their steel beds against the cell door, Olckers said.

Last week, the prisoners' rights group called on inmates to stage peaceful protests to win the right to vote in the April 26-28 election, the first national ballot in South Africa to include the black majority.

Somalia faction leaders to announce cease-fire agreement

The Associated Press

NAIROBI, Kenya — After a week of meetings and several postponements, Somalia's factions are expected to announce an agreement Tuesday for a cease-fire and for choosing the next leaders of the lawless, war-torn country.

U.N. spokesman George Bennett said Monday that he was relatively confident the agreement would be announced by Somalia's principal warlords, Ali Mahdi Mohammed and Gen. Mohamed Farrah Aidid, and the leaders of 13 other factions.

An expected announcement has been postponed three times since Sunday.

The faction leaders have been meeting in Nairobi for a week with funding from the United Nations Operation in Somalia. Bennett said that if the faction leaders failed to reach agreement as promised Tuesday, "I don't think the U.N. is going to fund their stay for any longer in Nairobi."

Aidid and Ali Mahdi are the main figures trying to take control of Somalia. The United Nations brokered a cease-fire in March after fighting between the two had destroyed three-quarters of the capital, Mogadishu, and killed 30,000 people.

The international community feared the country will revert to anarchy after most Western forces withdrew from Somalia in the coming days.
