

Radio bad boy Howard Stern to run for governor

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Radio bad boy Howard Stern instantly became the best-known challenger to Mario Cuomo when he announced plans Tuesday to run for governor.

He is serious. Stern's platform: Pass the death penalty. Get road crews to work only at night. Stagger highway tolls to prevent traffic jams.

Once these three goals are achieved, Stern promised to resign and turn New York over to his as-yet-unnamed lieutenant governor.

"I'm going to win," Stern told the roughly 3 million listeners of his nationally syndicated show. "I'm going to be the next governor of New York."

Well, maybe.

At the very least, his name recognition is miles ahead of the current crop of GOP challengers: Richard Rosenbaum, George E. Pataki, Bill Green. No one is challenging Cuomo in the Democratic primary; Stern hopes to run on the Libertarian ticket.

"Wait until the inauguration," Stern promised. "It'll be wild."

Just 'plane' smart

Singer disapproves campaign flier distribution during Arizona concert

The Associated Press

TEMPE, Ariz — Politicians, beware! Don't pretend to be pals with Jackson Browne.

The rock singer didn't appreciate campaign volunteers handing out fliers to concertgoers Sunday night for Dick Mahoney, Arizona's secretary of state and a U.S. Senate hopeful.

The fliers featured a list of the songs Browne was to perform and Mahoney's picture.

Browne told the audience he had nothing to do with it. "He made a disclaimer, 'Believe me, I don't endorse him. I don't even know him,'" concertgoer Terry Watkins quoted the singer as saying.

Sam Vagenas, Mahoney's campaign manager, said the fliers were done in fun.

"It's a little bit of a gimmick, you know," Vagenas said, adding volunteers halted the handouts when they learned Browne disapproved.

Mahoney, a Democrat, is running for the seat held by retiring Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz.
