

Fortune 500

They did illustrate the rising strength of American automaking and a shrinkage of the American petroleum industry, which has been affected by lower oil prices. General Motors Corp. easily retained its position as the biggest company. Ford Motor Co. bumped Exxon Corp. for the No. 2 spot, and Chrysler Corp. leaped from No. 11 to No. 8, bumping Chevron Corp., DuPont Co. and Texaco Inc. Extensive cost-cutting kept the petroleum industry profitable: Exxon earned $5.3 billion, more than any other company. The list also showed the fast expansion of the U.S. computer industry. The company with the biggest sales increase, No. 222 Dell Computer Corp., first made the Fortune 500 list two years ago. The biggest loser was No. 4 International Business Machines Corp., which lost $8.1 billion due to the cost of a profound restructuring at the computer maker. Another loser was New York state, which for the first time is no longer home to the most number of Fortune 500 companies.

Gangs

scared, for lack of a better word, now that they're in a gang and seeing that, not only is it their friends and stuff, but family members that are being killed and shot as result of their being in a gang," said Lt. Ed Daniels, commander of Fort Worth's gang unit. "On the other hand, they're also afraid to get out of it." Fort Worth is a prime example of how deadly gang violence is becoming in Texas. The death toll here from gang-related violence is already at 10 this year, compared with 17 in 1993. The problem has swept across the state and nation from the major cities to rural areas.

In San Antonio, police said a teen-ager who avoided gangs was slain Friday in a shootout between rival groups who targeted the wrong house. The boy's cousin was critically wounded in the hail of gunfire. At an Irving mall, a man who was eating pizza with his wife and two daughters was fatally shot in the head in a gang-related shooting two days after Christmas.
