Yankees bomb Rangers, 18-4 with home-run barrage as New York blasts Texas pitching

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Mike Gallego homered twice, Danny Tartabull drove in four runs and Bernie Williams hit a three-run homer Thursday as New York scored its most runs at Yankee Stadium in 39 years and routed the Texas Rangers 18-6.

New York, which had 19 hits — including six doubles — hadn't scored as many runs at home since a 19-1 victory against the Washington Senators on April 13, 1955. The last time the Yankees scored this many runs at home was a 18-5 victory at Fenway Park on April 18, 1988.

Terry Mulholland, acquired from Philadelphia in the offseason, won in his Yankees debut, allowing six runs and seven hits in 5 1-3 innings.

Five Texas pitchers walked nine and hit a batter. Ken Rogers, the Rangers' leader in wins last year with 16, was chased after three-plus innings. He allowed eight earned runs and nine hits.

Oilers would be adrift without ageless Moon at helm

Believe it or not, there's still another professional football team in Texas. Okay, its talent level is dropping faster than Jerry Jones' popularity up north of here, but the Houston Oilers are in fact still an NFL franchise.

However, they are preparing to pass beyond the point of no return in the eyes of this die-hard Oiler fan as they finalize plans to re-work Cody Carlson's contract and trade future Hall of Famer Warren Moon.

Moon, the nine-year starting quarterback for the Oilers is a living legend and one of the greatest clip-board holders of all-time.

I don't care how old Moon is, he's still one of the strongest-armed and smartest quarterbacks of all-time.

Cody Carlson, on the other hand, is one of the greatest clip-board holders of all-time.

Carlson has played very few games in his career, certainly not enough to hand him a new contract (his multi-year, million dollar deal is already bad enough) or the starting quarterback job of a team still hoping to reach the Super Bowl.

The Oilers are getting very old, very fast, and Carlson is definitely not the man to take the Oilers to the final step. Carlson has not started a game of much significance in some time (his last start was against the Patriots last season when the Oilers were sitting at 1-4).

The last time Carlson started a game with any sort of playoff implications was in the 1991 AFC wild card game, when the Cincinnati Bengals roughed Carlson up while blowing the Oilers away, 41-14.

The reported offer from the Vikings so far is a fourth-round pick in this year's draft, as well as a conditional third-round pick in 1995.

Yes, Moon has been more susceptible in recent years to injury, but he has missed only one post-season game in the seven consecutive years that the Oilers have reached the playoffs.

And above all, Moon has weathered the storms that have plagued the Oilers' franchise for the past decade. Someone who has survived Bud Adams, Buddy Ryan AND Jerry Glanville is obviously has some tenacity.

If the Oilers are preparing to reload their franchise by dumping the Run-and-Shoot offense, along with most of their aging high-priced talent, then Cody Carlson is not the one to go. Carlson will be 31 years old come November, an advanced age for an NFL player, even a quarterback.

But if a young quarterback is what the Oilers want, they've got one who is already one of the five most popular players on the team.

Yes, I am speaking of legendary former A&M player Bucky Richardson. When the game has been put out of reach, cheers of "Buck-y, Buck-y!" begin reverberating throughout the Astrodome.

Richardson is young and charismatic, much so that the Hamilton club from the Canadian Football League has offered him a two-year, $1 million contract to become its "marquee player."

That offer should be enough of a hint for even Bud Adams to realize that Richardson is a quality player who could bring in the fans even when the team itself is not winning consistently. Richardson is quick on his feet, will scramble if need be and has improved his passing considerably since being drafted by the Oilers two years ago.

The youth of Richardson or one last Super Bowl run with Moon? Either one would seem fine, but once again what I want is exactly opposite of what the Bud Adams will do for. Don't fire Bum Phillips. Don't trade Eric Campbell and My goodness, did we really trade Alonzo Highsmith in the first round?

negative about it. Competition's just all a part of football.

Although McElroy says he is not sure what is in store for next year or what goals he will try to accomplish. But, he says, his record already speaks for itself.

In the first quarter of the October 23 game at Rice, McElroy placed his name in the NCAA record books by returning back-to-back kickoffs for touchdowns.

The 93- and 88-yard runs catapulted McElroy into first in the nation in kickoff return average, a position he would never relinquish for the rest of the season.

In the last regular season game of the year, against the University of Texas, McElroy turned the tide of the game for A&M for good.

Down 6-0, following a second Longhorn field goal, the Aggies suddenly found themselves ahead when McElroy snared the kickoff in his own end zone and took off.

The last Longhorn with a chance to stop McElroy was Texas' place-kicker Scott Szereby.

When McElroy juiced him, Szereby looked as if his fleet were planted in cement instead of on the frozen Kyle Field Astroturf.

Ending the season, McElroy led the nation with a 39.33 yard per kickoff average, the second-highest average ever. Including all times McElroy touched the ball, he averaged more than 13 yards per possession.

With just one year of eligibility under his belt and still a 20 years old, the scary part of McElroy's career is that he now just be scratching the surface of his capabilities.

In the seasons to come, the 12th Man may witness the transformation of "LeeMac" into one of the all-time greats at A&M and in college football.

Before his days are through, "LeeMac" may become "Super Mac", a title more fitting of unlimited potential.
