Vet school to publish nationwide magazine

By Angela Neaves
The Battalion

Texas A&M's College of Veterinary Medicine recently won the opportunity to produce a nationwide veterinary magazine.

The magazine, titled Intervet, is the journal of the Student American Veterinary Medical Association.

Danette Dearing, editor of the magazine, said she expects the first issue of the magazine to be published in early September.

"Publishing the magazine is a big honor," Dearing said. "It will bring recognition to the vet school because the magazine is distributed to all vet students in the country."

Dearing said various schools around the country compete for the opportunity to publish the magazine.

The magazine will not require financial assistance from the University, she said.

"The funding for the magazine will come from advertising sales," Dearing said. "The magazine will be self-funded and entirely produced by vet students. Any profits will go to the Student American Veterinary Medical Association."

The magazine will be in full color and will have a circulation of approximately 8,000.

Dearing said the staff is also investigating the possibility of using recycled paper for the magazine.

Dr. Theresa Fossum, an adviser for the Texas A&M chapter of the Student American Veterinary Medical Association, said the magazine is an excellent opportunity for the College of Veterinary Medicine as well as for students.

"The magazine will bring exposure to the school because it is shipped around the country," Fossum said. "It also gives students an opportunity to work on a quarterly publication."

It will cover topics such as curriculum changes, roles of animals in society, alternative therapy and business management.

Fossum said the staff plans on using student input to decide on article topics.

Members of the Intervet staff include vet students Danette Dearing, Lisa de Avila, Jill Woods, Claudia Hite, John Cary, Cynthia Glover, Linda Ray, Mark Peterson, Aaron Wey and Bret Meckel.

The Intervet office will be located in the walkway between the veterinary school and the Medical Sciences Library.

Student stabbed while performing Dracula role

The Associated Press

GALVESTON — To the audience, the blood on Dracula's hand during the dramatic finale looked like a prop. To cast members of the Texas A&M-Galveston production, it meant trouble.

But Paul Bishop, the engineering sophomore in the title role, remained calm when the stabbing scene went awry and a knife meant to be stuck into a prop board landed in his chest, drama club adviser Melanie Cravey said.

Bishop, who suffered a punctured lung, was listed in good condition Sunday at the University of Texas Medical Branch Hospital in Galveston. He also apparently was in good humor.

"I wasn't feeling any pain and I wanted to milk it as much as possible without hurting myself," he told The (Galveston County) Daily News on Sunday's editions.

Cast members realized something was different when Bishop raised his bloodied hand and ad-libbed his last few lines Friday.

"I started walking on stage for the curtain call when someone yelled that Paul had been stabbed," drama club president Duana Boswell said. "I knew immediately that the knife had slipped."

Added Cravey, "We looked at each other for a minute and didn't know at first whether to believe it. But I knew something was weird when they didn't take a bow."

The scene during the play's last act had been practiced many times without any problems, Boswell said.

Bishop was protected by a half-inch thick board wrapped in leather and paraffin that was supposed to catch the board and allow it to stick out as he rose.

School officials said they plan to investigate the accident and the university canceled the remaining two performances of the play.

To Bishop, however, the show must go on.

"I am committed to this play," he said Saturday. "Whether it's tonight or next week."

Correction

The state did not have plans to close the original Still Creek Boys Ranch as originally reported in The Battalion. The home was not prospering and changed licensing from a residential treatment facility to a basic care facility. The Battalion regrets the error.
