

Cox

Although Cox was having a standout spring and had been projected to start at inside linebacker next season for the Aggies, Slocum said Cox's on-the-field accomplishments were not a factor in the decision to drop him from the team roster.

Cox came to A&M in 1990 after enjoying an outstanding career at DeSoto High School where he was a Parade All-American and Class 5A All-State linebacker as a senior.

After earning a varsity letter for his performance on special teams as a true freshman, Cox sat out the 1991 season to work on academics.

In 1992, Cox returned to the playing field as a third-year sophomore. He took over as the starting inside linebacker along side Jason Atkinson late in the season after injuries sidelined Reggie Graham and Larry Jackson.

He responded by registering 15 tackles in the final two regular season games before posting 17 in the Cotton Bowl against Notre Dame.

However, Cox was unable to reclaim his starting job in 1993 because he was suspended for the entire season by the NCAA for his involvement in a job scandal.

The scandal prompted the NCAA infractions committee to launch an investigation and eventually place the A&M football program on a five-year probation that will not allow the school to appear on television or in a bowl game next season.

Bosnia

United Nations peacekeepers sought the NATO air protection, which came hours after Bosnian Serbs suspended peace talks with U.N. and U.S. envoys.

In Sunday's attack, two U.S. F-16 fighters bombed a Bosnian Serb tank and command posts. Officials said both targets were visible for firing into the "no-fly zones" for Bosnian Muslims created by the United Nations.

The attack Sunday was the first on ground positions in a year history. In February, jets downed four Serb jets, creating a "no fly zone"
