Election

this election to be fair," Hastings said.

Michael Crain, election commissioner, said the problem arose because members of Alpha Phi Omega were unable to work at the library polling site.

"The whole thing has to do with miscommunication," Crain said. "This has changed from a case of the polls not being open to a case of inconvenience."

Crain said he received a call informing him the library site was closed at about 1 p.m. and he immediately sent people out to work the station.

Burke said he and Kennedy felt they won in a fair election process.

"There was enough time for everyone to get their vote in," Burke said. "This was equally unfair to each candidate. It's not like we gained some advantage in this. Who can tell how many votes were lost? If they really wanted to vote, they could have easily walked to Blocker or Zachary."

Kennedy said a revote in this case would not be in the best interests of the Class of '95.

"It would be virtually impossible to mobilize our constituency to vote again," she said. "We've already asked them to come out and vote twice."

Kennedy also said it would not be right to ask the student body to pay for another election, which Crain said would cost about $500.

Crain said Hastings and Burke proved nothing in their arguments.

"People are tired," Crain said. "This has gone on for a month. The voters don't care anymore. The election commission is tired and Texas A&M University is tired."

Commander

"I wish everybody could have the experience that I have had," he said.

Segrest said the skills he has learned in the Corps go beyond the military aspects, and the leadership abilities cadets gain will be there all of their lives.

Segrest's grandfather and older brother were in the Corps, but Segrest is the first in his family to serve as Corps commander.

Although his father was not an A&M student, Segrest said he was the most influential person in his life because of his diligence and determination.

When tough times came, his father just sucked it up and never quit, Segrest said.

Robert Davis, a junior aerospace engineering major, will serve as his second-in-command as deputy Corps commander.

"Bobby is a great guy to work with," said Segrest. "If I ask him to do something I know that it is going to get done."

Segrest will officially begin his new duties at Final Review in May.

Haraway said he will miss serving as Corps commander but is confident in the skills he has acquired.

"I am going to be sad to leave the Corps, but I will always be indebted to the University for giving me the opportunity to serve as the Corps commander," he said.

Juveniles

cause no problems at Bowling and Games. However, a few bad apples do appear on the scene once in awhile, Schnettler said.

In January, an incident occurred at Bowling and Games in which a juvenile threatened to start a fight after being accidentally hit in the leg with a cue ball. Although UPD escorted him out of the building that night, he returned the following Friday.

On that evening, UPD responded to an anonymous call concerning the juvenile. They confiscated a knife from the young man at this time and arrested him, Schnettler said.

Other problems arose when truants from local schools were coming to Bowling and Games during the week. But regardless of the time of day or night, the management's hands are tied.

"We can't say 'You're a high school student. You can't come in here,'" Schnettler said.

Juveniles also have been causing a problem on the sidewalks of A&M. Recently, UPD received complaints about groups of juveniles riding their skateboards on the sidewalks and bumping into people.

"They zig-zag around people and create a safety hazard," Kretzschmar said. "We have to tell them to stay off the sidewalks. Most comply with the request."

Many juveniles have been responsible for some of the stolen bikes reported to UPD recently.

"We have a lot of cases where bike thefts were done by juveniles," Kretzschmar said. "What we're talking about is people who come on campus for the purpose of stealing."

Many thefts are the result of thieves looking for the right opportunities to steal. Opportunities include unattended bicycles, purses and backpacks. Thieves often wander the hallways looking for empty offices.

"The best thing people can do when they see suspicious activity, such as a group of juveniles looking lost or trying doorknobs, is call the UPD immediately," Kretzschmar said. "We might watch them or question them. People need to keep their eyes and ears open."

Depending on the situation, UPD may escort the juveniles off campus or call their parents to come get them. In the case of theft or vandalism, the suspects are either released to their parents or taken to Juvenile Services.

While gang problems in the surrounding community are not a problem on campus, the emergency phone in Hensel Park has become a favorite target for vandalism by two Bryan gangs, Kretzschmar said.

A gang calling themselves the OCP (Organized Crime Posse) used to come to campus frequently. A&M was their turf, Kretzschmar said.

"Their activity has died down," he said. "They kind of broke up now. We don't hear much about them anymore."

During the summer months, the number of juveniles on campus increases because many local high school students are looking for something to do. The high number of juveniles on campus during the summer is also the result of the many youth camps held at the University.

Kretzschmar said the problems caused by a small number of juveniles.

"Not all juveniles are gangsters," he said. "We're strictly talking about juveniles who come on campus looking for problems."
