House adds carjackings, drive-bys to list of crimes punishable by death

WASHINGTON — The House responded to demands for tough anti-crime legislation by authorizing the death penalty Thursday for nearly 70 additional crimes.

Working on a $15 billion crime bill, the House rejected by a 314-111 vote an amendment that would have substituted life without parole for the death penalty. Among new crimes that could result in execution: drive-by shootings, a killing committed while taking a car and activities of big-time drug dealers, when they don't result in death.

At the White House, President Clinton focused on other parts of the bill as he addressed a ceremony honoring police officers. The bill, he told the officers, would give them "the tools you need to do your jobs."

"This is not a partisan issue or a sectional issue or racial issue or an income issue," Clinton said. "If anything should truly make us a United States of America, it should be the passionate desire to restore all freedom to our streets."

Judiciary Committee Chairman Jack Brooks, D-Ore., led the battle against the amendment to replace the bill's death penalty provisions with life in prison without parole.

"Plain common sense tells us that the death penalty is the only way to send an unequivocal message that some conduct simply will not be borne solely by innocent victims of heinous crimes without the highest price to be paid," Brooks said.

Rep. Michael Kopetski, D-Ore., who proposed the amendment with the support of the congressional Black and Hispanic caucuses, said, "In my view, life without any hope of release constitutes death by incarceration, a stiff penalty by any standard."

The House also rejected an amendment to eliminate the death penalty for murders committed during carjackings, drive-by shootings and federal drug and gun crimes, and another to eliminate the death penalty for drug kingpins even when no death occurred.

The chamber approved 35 noncontroversial amendments by a vote of 395-25.

They range from a five-year renewal of a popular grant program for state and local law enforcement to authorizing $12 million annually for three years to establish Boys and Girls Clubs in public housing.

In October 1992, Milwaukee attorney Robin Shellow argued that Lorena Morgan was suffering post-traumatic stress disorder from a life of violence inside and outside the home when she killed another woman. The girl was convicted, but the judge made her eligible for parole after serving the minimum 13 years and four months.

Other past defenses that have hinged on post-traumatic stress disorder include the highly publicized Lorena Bobbitt and Menendez brothers cases, said Shellow.

Bobbitt, who was acquitted on the grounds of temporary insanity, contended years of physical and sexual abuse led her to cut off her husband's penis.

Mistrials were declared for Eric and Lyle Menendez after jurors failed to agree on a verdict in the killing of their parents. The brothers claimed they acted in self-defense after years of sexual and psychological abuse.

"The reasons those were successful is because the defendants were white and middle class or upper-middle class," Shellow said.
