"In the past, he would set aside days just to talk to students and gather their opinions on issues affecting our campus," Matthews said. "He makes a real effort to interact with students."

Bowen said he plans to maintain an open-door policy with students when he arrives at Texas

Matthews, who described OSU as the most conservative school in the Big 8 Conference, said Bowen changed the atmosphere of the university.

"The atmosphere surrounding the university was very repressed when Dr. Bowen came in,' Matthews said. "But he came in with a positive attitude about the job and the atmosphere of the university changed.

Matthews said Bowen would be

"We really enjoyed Dr. Bowen the time he was here and congratulate your university on getting a very fine administrator," he said.

Elections

have people that are very committed to getting the job done and realize that this is not a fun

Crain said changes to election regulations will be made over the summer so the Student Senate can vote on changes at their first or second meeting next fall before freshman elections are held. "A lot of things need to be defined," Crain said. "What people need to realize is that there are going to be loopholes no matter what the regulations say.

Brooke Leslie, student body president, is working on setting up a committee to look into changes in election regulations.

Leslie will appoint committee members after the selection of her vice presidents this weekend. Problems arose during the re-cent elections after Will Haraway, commander of the Corps of Cadets, circulated a memo among cadets with the names of all students and cadets running for office. Questions also surfaced when some candidate's names were scratched off voter packets during the voting.

Crain said the four students who were caught scratching off names will not receive any further punishment from Student Government or the election com-

As far as we're concerned, the punishment came when their ballots were not counted," Crain

'To me the issue dies when they are unable to voice their opinion."

Thomas Darling, Corps commandant, said no punishment is being pursued at this time against the three cadets who were caught scratching off names. He said the issue is currently in the hands of Haraway and James McCleskey, chief of opentions and training who is in charge of the Corps Honor Board Darling said their guilt is still to be determined. "If the charges are substantialed, then some action should be taken," he said. "What people need to realize is that there are going to be loop holes no matter what the regulations say."

- Michael Crain, election commissioner

Darling said he thinks change in the regulations are in order and the Corps will be respons to any changes that are made.

"I would predict they will comply with any new regulations," he said.

"The Corps will remain interested and involved in the election."

process.

Darling said it is important that the elections be left in the hands of the students. This is a student-led, student-organized event. We should leave this to the students," Darling said.
