

Couple admits to dumping baby in park

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — A Quebec couple who claimed their 2-month-old daughter disappeared in Central Park admitted Sunday they had dumped her body in woods in Quebec more than a week ago after finding her dead in her crib.

Using a map the couple drew for detectives, Quebec police quickly found the body. The cause of death wouldn't be known before an autopsy Monday, said provincial police spokesman Tom McConnell.

The discovery ended a search involving about 75 New York City police, including scuba divers who checked ponds in Central Park, said John Hill, chief of Manhattan detectives.

The father had reported the infant missing Saturday afternoon — 18 hours after she supposedly disappeared.

The couple drove to New York with their other child, 4-year-old Priscille, who showed no signs of abuse, Hill said. The girl was sleeping

Sunday afternoon in a police station but would be turned over to city welfare officials, he said.

The parents — Joseph Bales, 33, and his wife, Helene Lemay, 31 — met with reporters at the station house late Saturday and made a tearful plea for the return of their infant girl, Muguet.

Within several hours, the parents' story unraveled. First the mother, then the father, admitted what really happened, Hill said.

"These aren't hardened criminals," Hill said. "If they were hardened criminals, they wouldn't have made such stupid blunders."

Hill said that within the past two or three years, the couple had a foster child taken from them by Canadian authorities because of abuse allegations. He had no details.

The couple feared trouble, Hill said, when they found their baby dead in her crib on April 8 in their home in Saint Romain, about 20 miles north of the Vermont border in southern Quebec.

So the parents decided to get rid of the body that day. They wrapped it in three plastic bags and dumped it in woods near the remote Quebec town of Eastman, about 75 miles from their home.

Over the next week, the parents decided to concoct a story about the girl's disappearance. They apparently decided to tell the story in New York because it's a big city, said police Sgt. Sean O'Neill, who helped interpret for the primarily French-speaking couple.

The father told detectives Saturday afternoon that he had fallen asleep on a park bench the evening before and awoke to find the infant missing.

"We were suspicious from the beginning," Hill said.

After checking with U.S. Customs and hotel officials and talking to Priscille, detectives determined that the parents hadn't brought the infant into the country, and the couple was charged with filing a false report. Then they admitted dumping the body.
