'An Environmental Perspective'

Aggie receives Girl Scouts' highest honor for video

By Jennifer Gressett

When most of us think of Girl Scouts, things like Somoas, Dosi-does and Tagalongs come to mind. But one Texas A&M student has proven there's more to being a Girl Scout than selling cookies.

Susan Armstrong, a freshman bioenvironmental sciences major, recently received her Gold Award — the highest honor that can be earned by a Girl Scout — for producing a videotape on environmental awareness. The video, entitled "An Environmental Perspective," gives an insight to the environmental problems and things that can be done to prevent them, Armstrong said.

"(The video) is based on the growing intensity of the awareness that needs to be put out nowadays. A lot of people don't catch on to that," Armstrong said.

Upon the request of the Tejas Girl Scout Council in Dallas, Armstrong submitted a three-minute video clip of her project to the Earthwatch Take a Step video contest. Earthwatch is a non-profit institution that supports worldwide scientific field research to improve the understanding of the planet.

When Armstrong sent in her video, she said she doubted she would win with the competition she was up against. However, this past February, she was told that she was one of five winners of over 100 submissions.

"I liked my video, but I knew I was up against big chapters and large monumental organizations like the Sierra Club," Armstrong said. "I just didn't think they'd be choosing amateurs like me."

Even as an amateur, Armstrong put five months of hard work into the planning and production of the video. She said she couldn't have done it without the help of her family and friends, though.

"It was a cooperative effort,"

Change of pace for Jackopierce

Duo to promote new album in B-CS today

 "Bringing On The Weather"
 Rock
 A&M Records

After four years of success, Jackopierce will release their first major record label debut, "Bringing On The Weather," today.

The group will be at Marooned Records this afternoon to perform an in-store concert to celebrate the release of their fourth album.

Jack O'Neill and Cary Pierce are Jackopierce, a Dallas duo who sing and play the guitar. They have sold over 42,000 copies of their three independent albums since they met in 1988 at Southern Methodist University. Jackopierce began playing at clubs in Dallas and around Texas and soon had a fan base across the states.

"College Station was one of the first places we played outside of Dallas," O'Neill said. "A&M has been more than supportive."

He said fans should possibly expect some accompaniment at the upcoming concert.

"You'll just have to see what happens," Pierce said. "You never know with Jackopierce."

For those who have never heard Jackopierce, Pierce describes the band as "not alternative," but "like alternative." Their lyrics are filled with intellect and sensitivity.

"We like to stay away from the words 'acoustic' and 'folk' when describing our music," Pierce said.

Jackopierce decided to sign with A&M Records after looking at several other companies.

"We were hesitant at first, but we fell in love with A&M," Pierce said. "A&M Records is just awesome."

Pierce describes the new album "Bringing On The Weather," produced by T Bone Burnett (Counting Crows, Elvis Costello), as a tougher and darker side of Jackopierce.

As on all of their albums, Jackopierce wrote all of the songs on "Bringing On The Weather." But for Jackopierce fans, this album sounds a little different.

"Bringing Back The Weather" doesn't quite capture the energy and soul that comes out when these two perform live.

"Cary and I are beginning to approach symmetry, we are defining Jackopierce more on each album," O'Neill said.
