able ... not anymore," he said.

"Students need to change the way they perceive responsibility in the job search," he said. "It is much easier to let someone find you instead of you finding them, but times have changed. Now they need to take the initiative."

Wheeler said the center has 20 to 25 job listings a day.

"We're in pretty good shape compared to other schools," Wheeler said.

The Career Center also offers a career resources library, major/career files, and career advising. A placement orientation seminar is offered weekly during the summer.

Wheeler said the Career Center does not change its program in the summer. All the services available during the fall and spring are available in the summer except for special workshops on interviewing skills and resume preparation.

This is because of low student demand for these seminars during the summer, he said.

The Career Center would include the workshops if the demand was higher, he said.

"Because there are no workshops during the summer, we change the emphasis of the orientation to include some of the subjects usually covered in the workshops," Wheeler said.

Vicky Christopher, a senior English major, said that although the center was helpful, it seems to be geared towards engineering and industrial distribution majors.

The Career Resources Library has company files, a video room with at least 500 videos, directories and magazines. It also has career planning materials as well as materials on specific careers.

Jo Ann Ledlow, career center librarian, said the center does not allow students to check out many books, but they can look through them while visiting the Career Center.

Undergraduate advisers from the College of Business and the College of Liberal Arts often refer students to the Career Center.

Hillary Jessup, academic adviser for the College of Business Administration, said the advisers took a tour of the Career Center about two months ago.

"The Career Center is very helpful, and we encourage students to go there," she said.

The 13 companies visiting campus to recruit students are scheduled to begin later this month.

Rockets

"He (Thorpe) lived off what Hakeem did not get, he's a real force," Knicks coach Pat Riley said.

Thorpe scored 14 points, including a key basket in the closing seconds when the Knicks cut deeply into the Rockets' lead.

"His numbers don't speak for what he does for this team," Tomjanovich said. "In the first series he had to go up against Buck Williams, and Cliff Robinson, then he has since played Charles Barkley and Karl Malone."

"We could not have won without his great effort tonight. He has been great for us in every series we've played."

Herrera had not played in a game since May 17 when he received a shoulder separation in Game 5 of the semifinal series against Phoenix. He took advantage of Houston's 8-day lay-off after clinching the Western Conference title.

But he returned on a hot streak, giving the Rockets a boost early in the second quarter. "My shoulder didn't hurt at all, even when I jammed it," Herrera said. "I was more concerned about the team being off as long as they were. I had to work harder just to get back to normal playing condition."

The Rockets expected a rugged physical test from the Knicks and they got it.

"It was so intense out there, something had to suffer and tonight it had to be the shooting," Herrera said.

The lack of outside shooting by the Rockets, put the heat on Thorpe to get more offensive rebounds.

"We had to go more for offensive rebounds because our perimeter shots weren't falling," Thorpe said. "Of course, that means I had more opportunities."

"The fourth period we always talk about execution. Tonight, it wasn't there so I had to rebound we had to hit free throws and hang in there. We had no trouble with fatigues, the week off was concern I'm glad that game is behind us."

"Both teams had problems with jitters. But it's a relief that we were able to get the win and get off to a good start."
