Astros fall to Giants, Rangers pound Seattle

Giants 5, Astros 4

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Matt Williams hit his National League-leading 23rd home run, and William VanLandingham and three relievers combined on an eight-hitter as San Francisco beat Houston 5-2 Monday.

Reynolds

The Giants also got a home run from Todd Benzing. VanLandingham (2-0) allowed two runs on four hits over 6 2-3 innings in his fourth major league start. He walked four and struck out five. Dave Burba and Mike Jackson followed, and Rod Beck worked the ninth for his 13th save. Beck did allow a two-run homer by Andujar Cedeño, his eighth, in the ninth inning.

Shane Reynolds (3-3) pitched five innings, giving up five runs on eight hits with a walk and three strikeouts.

Benzing homered in the first inning to put San Francisco on top early.

In the fifth, Benzing singled ahead of the homer by Williams.

Rangers 17, Mariners 9

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Jose Canseco hit three homers and drove in eight runs, offsetting Ken Griffey Jr.'s grand slam and six RBIs, leading the Texas Rangers over the Seattle Mariners 17-9.

Canseco

Canseco went 5-for-6 with a team-record 14 total bases. He set a career-high for RBIs, as did Griffey. Canseco hit a two-run homer in the first inning and a three-run shot in the third that went an estimated 480 feet, the longest in Arlington since the Rangers began recording distances in 1987.

He hit a solo shot, his 19th, in the seventh, matching his career high for homers in a game.

depth," Feeney said. "A major key to our success this season was the quality of depth we had. We were able to use a variety of lineups, enabling us to attack our opponents in different ways."

The bench depth can come into play at anytime during a season, Feeney said.

"What we're trying to do with the players coming in is to balance the group that is coming back," Feeney said. "During the season you could have injuries or illnesses and you have to have someone step up."

In addition to the balance of quality, the maintenance of team chemistry was one factor that weighed on McDonald's mind.

"We most definitely got good solid players, but we also got good people," McDonald said. "I think the players we got will enhance the team chemistry. They're all winners."

Lucas takes 76ers coaching job

Ex-Spurs' coach to double as Philadelphia's general manager

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Philadelphia 76ers will name former San Antonio Spurs coach John Lucas as their new coach and general manager Tuesday, The Philadelphia Inquirer reported.

The team will introduce Lucas at a press conference today, one day after 76ers owner Harold Katz met with Lucas in Philadelphia, the newspaper said, quoting unidentified sources close to the team.

The team told head coach Fred Carter Monday that his one-year contract, which expires in two weeks, will not be renewed, the Inquirer said.

The 76ers have been without a general manager since Jim Lynam left last month to become the head coach of the Washington Bullets.

Lucas, 40, who resigned from the Spurs last week, has also been contacted by the Portland Trail Blazers.

But he was attracted by holding two positions, the first time in 76er history that one person has been both coach and general manager, the newspaper said.

"The main reason he's coming is he wants to run the whole show and not answer to so many people," one source told the Inquirer.

Katz and Lucas negotiated a contract Monday that covers at least three years, the newspaper said. Carter was expected to meet with Lucas today to discuss another position in the franchise. The sources said an assistant general manager may be needed while Lucas is on the road.

"I'm coming to listen, I'm keeping an open mind," Lucas said before his meeting with Katz on Monday.

Lucas has less than two years experience as an NBA coach and none as a general manager. A former cocaine addict, he has founded a chain of drug treatment centers.

Katz had continued to look around for candidates for both jobs. He obtained permission from the Charlotte Hornets to contact player personnel director Dave Twardzick, and has also interviewed New Jersey assistant coach Brendan Suhr, the Philadelphia Daily News reported.

The newspaper also said that Mitch Kupchak, assistant general manager of the Los Angeles Lakers, turned down an offer to become the 76ers' general manager

Just go to a tee-ball game and remind yourself that as high tech as the sport may get, and as much money as the players might make, it is still just a game.

And the next time you watch the sporting event of your choice, notice when another fan, a player or a coach gets angry, and question why. Played, officiated, coached and watched by flesh and blood human beings, its importance and effect on the world around us is nothing.

And when you completely disagree with everything you have just read remember: Michael Jordan, that hero of heroes, is somewhere on a minor league baseball field happily striking out.

Camp

Kayla Kelly, 10, from Kingwood, said this is her second year to come to the camp. She said even though the counselors work them really hard, she has a great time.

"It (the camp) is really fun," she said. "I get to meet the counselors and play basketball."

11-year-old Rachael Hillman, also from Kingwood, said her basketball improved after she came to A&M last year.

"I played in the Kingwood YMCA league last year," she said. "My parents said I was really better."

McDonald said having the camp is good for A&M because many high school coaches work as counselors.

"The camp is an opportunity to get the word out about A&M. These coaches come on campus and get to see our staff and how we run our program," she said.

The impact the camp has on A&M is important, but McDonald said the best part of the camp is seeing the kids succeed and watching them react to meeting A&M players.

"It is lots of fun to work with the kids," she said. "At night our players come out and officiate some of the kids' scrimmages. These kids see A&M players as role models."

Lisa Branch said she likes helping out with the camp. The five-foot-four A&M point guard said the camp helps her self-esteem.

"It's great because most of the girls are smaller than I am so they have to look up to me," she said.

Branch said what these girls are doing is commendable.

"I really admire these girls for taking a week off to make themselves better," she said. "While other people are home laying around, these girls are really working."

an injury-filled 1993, but had lost his drive for the game.

"It took me 2 1/2 months to realize that. I kept thinking it might come back but it never really did," he said.

Sandberg was in a 1-for-23 slump, his average is just .238 and he has only five homers. He entered this season with a .290 career average after batting .309 last season.

"He's financially secured and said he wants to more time with his family and playing golf," said Richie Bry, his agent, said Monday.

"But if the Cubs were more competitive right now, who knows if he would've retired at this point?"

"I've been through losing streaks and I've been through slumps. I've been through slumps every year and I know how to come out of slumps. I don't think that was a major part of it," Sandberg said.

The Cubs have not managed to get Sandberg where he always wanted to go — the World Series. Chicago did win divisional titles in 1984, when Sandberg was MVP, and 1989.

Sandberg has played on only three winning teams since 1982.

Sandberg will no longer draw his hefty salary. Jim Turner, another of his agents, said details were being worked out on a personal services contract that would compensate Sandberg and maintain his connection with the Cubs.

"We talk about money driving the industry and individuals and the greed involved. He's not a very greedy guy," Cubs manager Tom Trebelhorn said.

Sandberg didn't tell his teammates until Monday morning, saying he didn't want to distract them.

He did tell Trebelhorn how he was feeling Saturday morning, and was given Saturday and Sunday off to reflect.

ability," Thomas said. "Staten has that and the work ethic to do well. If you know him, you're not surprised (by his success)."

"He is a coach's dream. You don't have to worry about him. He's early to practice and stays late. He does everything that's asked of him."

During Holmes' freshman year at A&M, he enjoyed the success that few people receive in a college career. In March he won the Indoor National Championship and on May 25 he won the Outdoor National Championship.

He was shooting very well at the collegiate championships, he said.

"At the collegiate championships everything clicked," Holmes said. "It was a great feeling."

During the second day of competition Holmes had turned a 14 point deficit into a 12 point lead, finishing with a score of 1282, his personal best.

Holmes was not the only A&M shooter to do well at the Outdoor championship.

"It wasn't just an individual effort (by me)," Holmes said. "The whole team shot well and was focused."

That focus translated into a second place finish by the men's team, a second place finish for the co-rec team and a third place finish for the women's team.

On May 29, the team found themselves back in College Station for the 1994 US Olympic Festival Trials.

The trials tournament consisted of a qualifying round where the contestants shot a feda of 36 arrows each from 90 meters, 70 meters, 50 meters and 30 meters. The top sixteen finishers in the qualifying round were then seeded against each other, No. 1 versus No. 16, No. 2 versus No. 15, etc.

Holmes finished with a score of 1281, one point short of his personal best set at the Outdoor Championships. That score gave him second place for the Festival trials. The top four finishers were selected to go to the Festival in St. Louis.

His latest trip marks the fourth time Holmes has made it to the Olympic Festival. He went to Minneapolis in 1990, Los Angeles in 1991 and San Antonio last year.

Holmes said he is excited about returning to the Festival.

"They're a lot of fun," Holmes said. "The archers at the Festival are the top shooters in the country. They're like a mini-Olympics."

Even though he has had a great deal of success, Thomas thinks the best is yet to come from Holmes.

"I think his best years are in front of him," Thomas said. "I think he's got a good chance for (the) 1996 or 2000 (Olympics)."

To be Olympic material requires a certain kind of dedication and Thomas thinks Holmes has that dedication.

"With Staten, archery is not a part of his life, it is a way of his life," Thomas said.
